Conditions of Sale

The following terms and conditions are accepted by all persons participating in the auction:

1. Auction bidding is conducted in Swiss Francs. The highest bidder who has been acknowledged by the auctioneer when the hammer falls after the third call has legally bought the lot. Bidding usually begins at 80% of the estimate, provided no higher offers have been submitted. Written bids have priority. The successful bidder has committed himself personally to the purchases made. He cannot claim to have acted on behalf of a third party.
2. Absentee bidders can bid up to 24 hours before the start of the auction by writing, telephone or electronically. Telephone bidders must agree that calls may be recorded. The auction house does not accept liability for bidding mandates made by telephone or in writing.
3. Bidders must show proof of identification before the auction, and subsequently be registered. The Auction House may require a bank reference and/or guarantee. The Auction House reserves the right to deny a person from participating in the auction.
4. The auctioneer may raise or reject a bid without giving a reason, and furthermore reserves the right to combine or split up catalogue lots, or to offer them out of sequence or omit or withdraw them from the auction.
5. A commission of 18% will be levied on the hammer price - phone bidders and bidders using our Live Internet facilities pay an additional charge of 1.5%. The Swiss value added tax (VAT) of 8% is payable on the final price (hammer price, plus buyer's commission and any other amounts chargeable by the Auction House to the buyer). Gold coins (AV) are exempt from VAT.
If the purchases are exported, then the VAT will be refunded on production of a legally valid original export declaration stamped by Swiss Customs.
6. Payment is in Swiss Francs and is immediately due upon adjudication of the lot. Late payments will incur a monthly default interest of 1%.
7. Shipping and insurance are at the buyer's cost and risk. Any fees and charges payable abroad are borne by the buyer (successful bidder) who is responsible for acquiring the necessary information about any applicable customs and foreign exchange regulations. The Auction House accepts no liability for any contraventions of such regulations.
8. The Auction House offers an unconditional and unlimited guarantee for the authenticity of coins. All identifications and descriptions of the items sold in this catalogue are statements of opinion and were made in good faith.
9. The objects which come under the hammer are auctioned on behalf of a third party or are the property of the Auction House. The buyer (successful bidder) has no entitlement to have the identity of the consignor disclosed to them and acknowledges that the Auction House might receive a commission from the consignor for the sale.
10. The above conditions are a component of each individual contract of sale concluded at the auction. Alterations must be made in writing in order to be valid. If any parts of these Terms and Conditions should be no longer or not fully in conformity with the valid legal situation, this shall not affect the content and validity of the remaining parts. The above-mentioned conditions are written in German, French, Italian and English; the only valid text is the German one.
11. The contractual relationship between parties is subject in all facets to Swiss law. Place of performance is the registered office of the Auction House in 8001 Zurich, and the exclusive court of jurisdiction is Zurich.

Condizioni de la vente aux enchères

Du fait de la participation à la vente aux enchères, les conditions suivantes sont réputées être acceptées :

1. Les enchères sont effectuées en Francs Suisses. L'adjudication est réalisée après trois appels consécutifs du plus offrant dont l'offre a été acceptée par le commissaire priseur et qui constitue une obligation. La mise à prix est effectuée en règle générale à 80 %, dans la mesure où il n'y a pas d'offres disponibles et plus élevées. Les offres formulées par écrit sont prioritaires. Chaque enchérisseur s'engage personnellement en ce qui concerne les acquisitions réalisées par ses soins. Il ne peut pas faire valoir le fait d'avoir agi pour le compte d'une tierce personne.
2. Les demandes d'enchères par téléphone ou par écrit (également par moyen électronique) pour les personnes intéressées et non présentes sont réceptionnées jusqu'à 24 heures avant le début de la vente aux enchères. Les enchérisseurs par téléphone acceptent que la communication téléphonique puisse être enregistrée. La salle des ventes n'assume aucune responsabilité quant aux enchères effectuées par téléphone ou par écrit.
3. Les enchérisseurs sont priés de se légitimer avant la vente aux enchères et de se faire enregistrer à l'issue de la vente. La salle des ventes peut exiger une référence bancaire et/ou une garantie. La salle des ventes a le droit de ne pas laisser une personne participer à la vente aux enchères.
4. L'enchérisseur peut, à sa guise, surenchérir une offre ou bien la décliner sans indication de motifs. L'enchérisseur se réserve en outre le droit d'associer des lots, de les séparer, de faire des offres en dehors de l'ordre prévu ou de les laisser de côté, voire de se retirer de la vente aux enchères.
5. Une commission de 18% est perçue sur le prix d'adjudication. Les acquéreurs qui souhaitent participer aux enchères par téléphone ou en ligne avec nos facilités Live Internet paieront un frais supplémentaire de 1,5%. La taxe à la valeur ajoutée suisse d'un montant de 8,0 % sera perçue sur le prix définitif (prix d'adjudication plus supplément et sur tous les autres montants facturés à l'acquéreur par la salle des ventes). Les pièces de monnaie en or (AV) sont dispensées de la TVA.
En cas d'exportation de l'objet adjugé vers l'étranger, l'acquéreur se voit restituer la TVA lorsqu'il est en mesure de présenter une déclaration d'exportation réglementaire, en bonne et due forme, revêtu du cachet original des autorités douanières suisses.
6. Le prix total est exigible après application du supplément et doit être acquitté en devises suisses lors de la remise de l'objet adjugé. Pour les paiements effectués ultérieurement, une pénalité de retard de 1 % par mois sera facturée.
7. Les frais d'envoi et d'assurance sont à charge et au risque de l'acheteur. Les taxes ou les impôts facturés à l'étranger sont à la charge de l'acquéreur (enchérisseur). Il lui incombe de s'informer au sujet des directives étrangères en matière de douane et de devises. La salle des ventes décline toute responsabilité pour les éventuelles infractions à l'encontre de ces directives.
8. La salle des ventes garantit l'authenticité des monnaies sans réserve et sans limitation dans le temps. Toutes les indications mentionnées dans le catalogue sont rassemblées en toute conscience et en toute bonne foi.
9. Les objets mis aux enchères le sont pour le compte de tierces personnes ou bien sont la propriété de la salle des ventes. L'acquéreur (enchérisseur) n'a aucun droit d'obtenir communication du nom de la personne qui met en vente et se déclare en accord avec le fait que la salle des ventes perçoive une provision de cette dernière.
10. Les présentes conditions font partie intégrante de tout contrat de vente conclu dans le cadre de la vente aux enchères. Les modifications ne sont valables que par écrit. Le fait que des parties des présentes conditions de vente aux enchères venaient à ne plus correspondre, ou du moins plus intégralement, à la situation juridique en vigueur, n'affecte en rien les autres parties, ni dans leur contenu, ni dans leur validité. La version en langue allemande constitue la référence des présentes conditions de vente aux enchères.
11. La relation contractuelle entre les parties en cause est soumise, dans toutes ses composantes, au droit Suisse. La compétence juridique est fixée au siège de la salle des ventes à 8001 Zurich, et le for juridique exclusif est Zurich.

Ex Vinchon Monte Carlo, 13-15 April 1986, Trampitsch, 317 and Leu 59, 1994, 15 sales. From the collection of the Money Museum of Zürich.

The late Iron Age village of Lutetia, located at the site of modern-day Paris, was the capital of the Celtic tribe the Parisii. Its main settlement was on the Ile de la Cité on the River Seine (Sequana). In Julius Caesar's day the island was perhaps half its current size, and was subject to frequent flooding. Its inhabitants grew wealthy through the tin trade, being middlemen to the mines on the British Isles. During the Roman advance in 52 B.C. the Celts burned their city, and the bridges that linked it to the banks on either side, but after Roman dominion was established it was rebuilt and named Parisii.

Careful study has been made of the Parisii gold staters, most recently by John Sills, who has employed die studies along with metrological, metallurgical and hoard evidence to better understand the developments in this coinage. He concludes that staters of the Parisii type were struck at three mints, with the coins of the main facility ('mint A'), which we might presume was located on the island, being divided into seven classes. Much smaller productions are attributed to Sills' mints B and C, each of which he divides into two classes. This coin belongs to the fourth class of the mint A coinages, which typically are 69% gold.

Ex NAC sale 6, 1993, 54..

Why Locri Epizephyrii failed to strike coinage before the 4th Century B.C. remains a mystery, especially since several of its less-important neighbours produced large coinages in the Archaic and early Classical periods. Robinson proposed that the city's coinage needs may have been met by nearby Caulonia, which had an inexplicably large output for a city of its size.

Beyond its basic classification, little is understood about the coinage of Locri. However, numerous inscriptions dating from c.350-250 B.C. suggest that at least by the time Locri was issuing coins, the sanctuary of Zeus had become the city's principal credit institution by granting loans by transferring sacred revenues to the public funds. Thus, it is hardly surprising that Zeus or his associated symbols dominate the major coin types of the city.

This stater appears to be from the inaugural issue at Locri. Its style and composition are masterful, its type unique, and its rarity a strong indication that this was a small issue struck for a brief period. Yet, there is no consensus among scholars as to precisely when, or why, it was struck – only that it probably dates to between c.375 and 330 B.C.

Head dated the issue to c.344-332 B.C., noting that the depiction of Eirene (peace) suggested it was struck in “an era of internal peace and prosperity.” He proposed that it was struck after the younger Dionysius was expelled from the city in 346 B.C. The son of the Syracusan tyrant Dionysius I, who had married a noble Locrian woman, Dionysius II was welcomed as an exile. When he behaved despotically he was forced to leave. This turned out to be an event of great importance since it caused the former oligarchic regime to be replaced by a moderate democracy.

Most scholars had agreed with Head that this coinage was struck after c.350 B.C., though some associated it with the activities of Timoleon or Alexander the Molossian. However, Kraay favoured an earlier date of c.375 B.C., based upon a comparison with the introduction of the seated Nike on the staters of Terina (a design which is generally considered to be the prototype for the first coinage at Locri). In doing so, Kraay paid greater attention to style and fabric than to the possibility it was linked to an historical event.

In defence of that approach, he suggested it is possible that the reverse inscription was meant to be read as ‘eirene of the Locrians’, thus making peace at Locri comparable to Nike at Terina. He added that “...if Eirene at Locri was a city-goddess like Nike at Terina, the issue need not be occasioned by any particular manifestation of peace, and the date in the first quarter of the century of the prototype at Terina for the seated figure suggests that the version at Locri should not be later than c. 375 B.C.”

During the era of this didrachm, four artists signed at Camarina: VL, EXE, Exakestidas and Euainetos. The latter is the most famous of those artists, and is the one who signed the obverse die of the coin offered here. For this particular issue of didrachms only three dies are recorded, two obverse and one reverse. The other obverse die has no visible signature, though its quality assures us it was the work of a master artist – perhaps Euainetos or Exakestidas; it is known only from a single specimen, on which a die break obscures the base of the neck, and thus probably also the artist's signature. On this obverse Euainetos creates a placid image in line with Kimon's facing-head Arethusa of Syracuse (from which it probably was inspired), and which bears a striking resemblance to a very rare drachm of Syracuse (SNG Lloyd 1397). The countenance of our river-god Hippiaris is calm and reflective; even the turn of his head toward the viewer seems naturally posed. The reverse scene, which recalls the myth of Leda and the swan, is similarly placid, and no less accomplished, for it shows a light-hearted and playful scene unfolding before our very eyes. The nymph Camarina devotes her attention to assuring her chiton billows in the wind above her head as she reclines carelessly on the back of her swan, steadying her position by placing her right hand upon the swan's breast. At this very moment the powerful, yet elegant bird is preparing to take flight or has just landed on the water; as its great wings are sprung into action, waves crest below and two fish, in response to the alarming state of affairs, are stirred, one propelling itself skyward. The inscription does not interfere with the delicate composition of this complex design, which required an optimal effort from a renowned engraver. Camarina was located near the estuaries of the Oanis and Hippiaris rivers on the southern coast of Sicily. It may be of some consequence that both the obverse and the reverse of this coin show two fish; they could represent the two nearby rivers, or, perhaps even more likely, they could symbolise the river and the sea, both of which were important to Camarina. The Hippiaris, the larger and more important of the two rivers, issued into the sea less than two miles from Camarina, and the Oanis was closer still. The Hippiaris was personified in god-form and is honored on Camarina's coins. On this issue he is shown nearly full-facing, and on other didrachms of this period (bearing inscription that name him) he is shown in profile.

Facing-head issues of Sicily are among the most appreciated and intensively studied of all ancient coins. This tetradrachm of Catana depicting the frontal portrait of Apollo is among the rarest and most interesting of this elite class of coins.

In the late 5th Century B.C. the artists at Catana experimented greatly and achieved some extraordinary results in terms of the style and composition of dies. Among these were three obverse dies for tetradrachms with the facing-head of Apollo – two by Heracleidas and one by his contemporary Choirion that was used to strike this piece.

There is no question that the die by Choirion is the least conventional of the three. Apollo's hair is dishevelled, parted strongly in the centre and accented with the leaves of his wreath, which protrude noticeably. The identity of his subject is clear, for Choirion added to the fields the god's familiar symbols of a bow and a lyre and he placed below the bust the inscription ΑΠΟΛΛΩΝ.

Choirion's achievement is not in the precision of his die, but in the effect it has on the viewer. Apollo's expression is multi-faceted: he appears moribund and detached, and in the midst of contemplation. The artist was daring in his decision to portray the god directly, rather than at a slight angle as was the usual approach. Finally, the treatment of the lyre is of interest, for its heavy, smooth appearance offers a strong contrast to the overlapping locks of hair.

The reverse die is most notable for its composition as the victorious charioteer crowned by Nike is leading his team into the curve of the race course, passing a meta in the form of an Ionic column. The arrangement of the horses is derived from Syracuse where, following one unsigned die (Tudeer obverse die 22), it became common to show all of the horse heads forward except for the second, which is reverted.

Like many cities, Catana benefited from the prosperity in Sicily of the mid-5th Century, allowing tetradrachms such as this to be struck near the end of the century. Beginning with the period 415-413 B.C., when Catana was the headquarters of an Athenian expedition against the Syracusans, the city was freed from Syracusan oversight. It remained so until 403, when a Syracusan force under Dionysus I captured it by surprise and sold its people into slavery. The depopulated city was then offered to Dionysus' Campanian mercenaries, who occupied it on behalf of their benefactor.

Coinage at Gela began with a prodigious series of didrachms that appear to have been struck for a relatively short time, c.490-475 B.C. Though outstanding examples of this early coinage are difficult to find, the quantity that has survived and the prominence of die breaks and die wear suggests that it was a sizeable production.

At the end of that early didrachm series a larger denomination coin, the tetradrachm, was introduced. The first effort was extremely limited: only one obverse and three reverse dies employing a transitional design with the reverse showing a full-bodied river-god rather than the forepart that had appeared on the didrachms.

That transitional series was quickly abandoned in favor of tetradrachms of a new type that showed on their obverse a slow chariot and on their reverse the forepart of the river-god. The introduction of the chariot obverse may be credited to the success of the contemporary tetradrachms of Syracuse. The reverse, however, remained a local type and became emblematic of the city's coinage.

The basic designs of the tetradrachm remained the same from its introduction in c.480/75 until the city was sacked by the Carthaginians in 405 B.C. Beloved for their charming variations, there are only a few notable departures from the basic type, with the present coin being one of them. This issue of c.425 B.C. replaces the forepart of the river-god Gelas – there portrayed as a bearded, primal force in action – with an elegant, clean-shaven, youthful version of the creature.

A prize of Sicilian coinage, this issue was produced with two obverse and three reverse dies. We are fortunate that this example was struck with the best set of dies, obverse 85 and reverse 172, which may well be the most accomplished die pair in the whole series at Gela. It is one of only two tetradrachms to which Jenkins dedicated separate enlargement plates – no doubt an indication of his opinion of the artistic merit.

The obverse features a chariot scene that by then was standard for Geloan tetradrachms, yet this time the driver is Nike, which Jenkins notes is the first appearance of that divinity as charioteer on any Sicilian coin. He describes the style as “extremely finished and elegant” and finds the presentation to be similar to scenes on tetradrachms of Selinus, yet different enough to be “a distinct and individual creation.” Robinson notes that the wreath over the chariot and the extraordinary engraving quality mark this coinage as one “...surely struck for some special occasion” and suggests it may have been for a victory in the stadium.

Though a youthful head of the river-god is a standard feature of Gela's bronze coinage of c.420-405 B.C., it rarely occurs on silver: only on this issue of tetradrachms, its companion issue of didrachms (produced with a reverse die so elegant that it must be from the same hand as our portrait die), and a contemporary tetradrachm with a facing-head that is ambitious but deformed, and is known by just one specimen.

Of all the issues of Siculo-Punic tetradrachms, those from Panormus are the most faithful to the coins of Syracuse. They were never precise copies, but in many cases even the smallest details are reproduced, leaving no doubt as to the prototype and the intent of the artist. Some early Syracuse-inspired tetradrachms of Panormus are based upon the works of Eumenes; not only are the style and composition a match for the original, but even the artist's signature is replicated. Others are clearly copied from the works of Eucleidas, and some less-inspired works are unquestionably based upon the decadrachms of Kimon. The sea monster (ketos) so recognisable from Syracusan tetradrachms appears in the exergue of some issues. The artistic quality in the series reached its apex with the set of dies used to strike this tetradrachm, one of the most celebrated works of Siculo-Punic coinage. This coin and its related issues are inspired by the decadrachms of Euainetos, which were familiar – even famous – in Sicily and beyond. Jenkins, in his 1971 study of the series, identifies this reverse as one of four portrait dies inspired by Euainetos' vision of the goddess.

Jenkins notes that the star before the chariot has no apparent precursor at Syracuse or elsewhere, but we can suggest that the swastika before the goddess' head is derived from the 'cross' that appears behind her head on one decadrachm die (Gallatin J.VIIa). This is especially plausible since one of the four Panormus reverse dies that successfully copies Euainetos' decadrachm portrait (Jenkins 55) shows a scallop shell in front of the goddess' head, whereas it appears behind it on the Syracusan originals. Before the series at Panormus closes there occurs a transformation that favours the 'modernistic' style of the Artemis-Arethusa/chariot tetradrachms of the tyrant Agathocles. The affinity is unmistakable, and is principally visible in the treatment of Artemis-Arethusa. But there was a limit to the degree of reproduction, for on the issues of Panormus the chariot remains on the obverse, whereas on the Agathoclean coinage the chariot had been relegated to the reverse.

Ex Leu sale 76, 1999, 54. From the collection of the Money Museum of Zürich.

In recent decades the dates of numerous ancient coins, including the celebrated works attributed to the Demareteion Master, have been reconsidered. These coins had traditionally been placed in 480 or 479 B.C. based upon an historical association derived from a passage in the eleventh book of Diodorus Siculus. However, the numismatic component of his account, which was composed 450 years after the events described, appears flawed, and current thought places these coins firmly between c.470 and c.460 B.C.

Diodorus records the generous terms for peace given by the Syracusan tyrant Gelon to the Carthaginians, who in 480 B.C. the Greeks had just defeated at the Battle of Himera. He reports that the Carthaginians were asked to pay only the costs of war incurred by the Greeks, two thousand talents of silver, and to build two temples in which copies of the treaty were to be preserved.

That report is followed by the passage relevant to the Demareteion decadrachm: "The Carthaginians, having unexpectedly gained their deliverance, not only agreed to all this but also promised to give in addition a gold crown to Demarete, the wife of Gelon. For Demarete at their request had contributed the greatest aid toward the conclusion of the peace, and when she had received the crown of one hundred gold talents from them, she struck a coin which was called from her a Demareteion. This was worth ten Attic drachmas and was called by the Sicilian Greeks, according to its weight, a pentekontalitra [a fifty-litra piece]." (XI 26.3)

In his 1969 work The Demareteion and Sicilian Chronology, Kraay challenged the notion current since 1830 that the decadrachm mentioned by Diodorus was the first issue of silver decadrachms at Syracuse. Beyond the fact that the passage suggests the coins would have been made of gold, Kraay objected on numismatic grounds to so early a date for the first decadrachm. He noted how its incorrect date of c.480/79 B.C. had become "the sheet-anchor of Sicilian numismatic chronology" and, consequently, had skewed ideas on the chronologies of so many other coinages.

Moreover, Kraay notes that the appearance of the leaping lion on two issues of Leontini tetradrachms had led some to assume that the tyrant of Leontini must have played a role at the Battle of Himera. However, literary sources record no such involvement, and if this coinage was disassociated with the victory at Himera, the only connection needed between the Demareteion issues of Syracuse and Leontini would be of a numismatic character.

It is now believed that the earliest possible date for the Demareteion decadrachm is c.470 B.C., and that it more likely was struck in about 465 B.C. The same may be said for the associated tetradrachms of Syracuse that Kraay notes exhibit "the same peculiarities of style and design" as the decadrachm. Kraay initially had narrowed the timeframe for the decadrachm to c.466-461 B.C., between the expulsion of the tyrant Hieron I from Syracuse and the removal of foreign mercenaries from the city in 461, and a few years later had settled upon c.465 B.C.

Both his contemporaries and successors regarded Euainetos as the ultimate master. No work of ancient coinage has been copied over a longer period or more frequently than his signed Syracusan decadrachm. Most siculo-punic issues replicate the chariot and team, as well as the head on the obverse. The female head in particular must have made an unusually deep impression on the ancients, appearing not only gold and electrum Carthaginian issues, but also on many 4th and 3rd century B.C. coins from sites as geographically disparate as Spain and Crete. In the 3rd century B.C., the head even served as the model for the tondo on varnished Greek bowls. From copyists' embellishments of corn-ears and stalks, we can only assume that they interpreted Euainetos' female head as an effigy of Kore-Persephone. Most researchers have nonetheless interpreted the work as representing Arethusa, in which case the corn-ears are out of place, although reeds of similar appearance would have fitted in very well. Such long-lasting impact and exceptional ubiquity is nevertheless understandable only in the context of a much-revered goddess, certainly not a local nymph.

125'000

From a Swiss private collection and the Mesopotamia hoard of 1973. Privately purchased from Spink & Son in 1972.

In the last two years of the life of Alexander III a massive quantity of bullion was converted into coinage at the king's principal mint in the East. This included part of the 180,000 Attic talents he confiscated at Susa and Persepolis. The mint is generally thought to have been in Babylon because there are shared control symbols between the Macedonian royal issues and the 'lion staters' that presumably were struck by Mazaeus, the man Alexander appointed satrap of Babylon in 331 B.C.

However, 'lion staters' were struck at several mints, and Price had reservations about identifying Babylon as the main mint in the East. He believed that Ecbatana or Susa were equally viable candidates for the mint which issued such a prodigious coinage. Among these millions of coins were three emissions of Alexandrine decadrachms, which co-opted the familiar types of Heracles and Zeus Aetophorus.

Alexander first set eyes on Babylon late in 331, after his victory at Gaugamela over the Persian King Darius III. He was impressed by the city's genial surrender, favorable climate and extraordinary hanging gardens. He remained in Babylon for more than a month before resuming his pursuit of Darius, who he defeated in July, 330.

After leaving Babylon, Alexander's further conquests involved twice crossing the Hindu Kush and winning control of Persis, Paratataka, Hyrcania, Bactria and Sogdiana. Finally, he crossed into northwestern India, where the dangers his army faced were of a higher order than anticipated. At this point the soldiers refused to venture beyond the River Hyphasis. A return journey was forced under unfavorable circumstances, requiring a journey across the Gedrosian desert, where a large portion of Alexander's army died of hunger and thirst.

Alexander arrived in Babylon in July, 324 and remained there until his death of a high fever in June, 323, at the age of 32 years, eight months. It is generally agreed that the issue which included the decadrachms was struck near the end of Alexander's life, being produced at 'Babylon' sometime between 325 and 323 B.C. Though it is tempting to think that these massive silver pieces were a special issue distributed by Alexander to his soldiers, and that the king's facial features are incorporated into the portrait of Heracles, evidence for such assertions is lamentably lacking.

Among the many fabled cities of Greece, Argos claimed to be one of the oldest. Indeed, Homer calls the Greeks 'Argives' in the Iliad, and we may consider this the root for the name Argonaut. During the Bronze Age the territory of Argos incorporated other famous and powerful cities, such as Mycenae and Tiryns, and Argos was still renowned in the 490s B.C. when it began to strike coins.

Its first issues were silver drachms and fractions that showed a wolf, symbolic of Apollo Lykios, who was worshipped in the city. The largest Argive coin of this early period, the drachm, shows a wolf in full, whereas triobols show its forepart, and obols show only its head – thus we have a compression of design that coordinates with the decrease in denomination. Hemiohols bore the archaic letter heta, and tetartemoria the letter tau. With a few design modernizations and an occasional new type, this system remained intact for perhaps 120 years.

In about 370 – soon after the Battle of Leuctra, which reduced Spartan and Theban influence in the Peloponnesus – Argos began to strike larger denomination coins with fresh designs of high artistry. The period c.370-350 represents the artistic peak for the mint at Argos, with several numismatic masterpieces being created. Argos was famous for its sculptors (including Myron, Polycleitus and Phidias' master, Ageladas), and we may presume the mint was able to draw upon a thriving arts community.

The two main issues from this period are staters and drachms. Both show on their obverse the head of Zeus' wife Hera, who wears a stephane decorated with palmettes. About six miles outside the city was the Heraeum, where this goddess is said to have been worshipped for thirteen generations before King Agamemnon ruled over Bronze Age Mycenae. Her original temple burned in 423, so the Hera bust on these coins must be based upon the renowned 26-foot statue by Polycleitus which was adorned with gold and ivory.

The Hera staters show on their reverse two dolphins swimming in opposite directions, creating a circular pattern. The Hera drachms show Diomedes, the Argive king of Homer's Iliad, advancing cautiously with sword drawn as he brings to his city the Palladium.

The dolphins may be a punning allusion to the Delphic Apollo, who was worshipped at Argos, but perhaps even more likely they reflect the worship of Poseidon based upon two mythological episodes that were etched into the Argive consciousness. In one instance the local river-god Inachus was among those forced by Hera and Poseidon to choose between them for possession of the land; when he chose Hera, Poseidon withdrew the waters. Consequently, as it was explained, the rivers carried water only after a heavy rain. In another episode, Poseidon is said to have created the Springs of Lerna a few miles south of Argos. Apparently Hera had convinced Poseidon to send back the sea, and the grateful Argives erected a sanctuary to Poseidon Prosclystius ('the floodier') at the point where the tide ebbed.

One of the few ancient traditions that survived to be reborn in the modern world is the quadrennial Olympic Games. Though the religious aspect disappeared with the eclipse of Greco-Roman paganism, the spirit of athletic competition among nations has survived intact. Every four years the world's attention turns to these great games, as it did in Olympia so many centuries ago. The coinage issued for these games had numerous purposes – as vehicles for commerce, as a source of income through a mandatory exchange, as a showcase for the works of gifted engravers, as souvenirs for visitors, and as celebrations of Zeus and Hera, who presided over the Sanctuary at Olympia and the games themselves. A narrow range of images dominate Olympic silver coinage, including the portraits of Zeus, his consort Hera and the nymph Olympia, the eagle and thunderbolt as symbols of Zeus, Nike as a symbol of victory, and the laurel wreath as an allusion to the games. Olympic staters appear to have been produced only to coincide with the games, and it has been demonstrated through Charles Seltman's careful die study (1921) that two separate mints contributed, one perhaps at the Temple of Zeus and another at the Temple of Hera. The mint of Hera probably was combined with that of Zeus some time toward the end of the 4th Century B.C., and perhaps a century later the Olympic mint may have been moved to the regional capital of Elis. This stater from the temple mint of Zeus is a perfect example of the fine workmanship of Olympic coinage of the early Hellenistic period, bearing a forceful head of Zeus and a vigilant eagle perched upon the head of a ram. Even within the repeating themes at Olympia the engravers celebrated varieties, including, on the Zeus/eagle issues, showing the eagle perched variously upon the back of a recumbent ram, a hare, a fawn, a stag's head, a snake, an Ionic column capital, or a simple base.

This early electrum stater is a remarkable object to which no mint can be reliably assigned. Its style, fabric, method of production and Milesian weight standard all suggest a mint in Lydia or Ionia, yet the lotus flower that is so prominently displayed on this coin is a familiar feature of the early coins of Thrace and Macedon. Similar electrum staters have been found in the northerly regions of Greece, but find spots of large-denomination coins do not always speak to their origin, as they were habitually used in regional or international commerce.

The lotus flower appears on at least two other early, electrum staters of the Milesian standard, both represented in the Jonathan Rosen collection (sylloge nos. 148-149). The first shows a bull kneeling with its head reverted; the other shows two rampant lions upright on their hind legs with heads reverted and paws extended. On these coins comparable flowers (shown above the bull and between the lions) are just as prominently displayed as on the present stater.

In all three cases the lotus flower is an integral design element, and its presence is perhaps of greater import than the lions and the bull, which were equally familiar designs in Greece and Asia. The lotus flower appears on Archaic Thracian and Macedonian coins, including tetradrachms of Abdera, tetrobols and dodecadrachms of the Derrones and tetrobols of Olynthus. It is also a prominent and recurring design element on the tetrobols and tetradrachms of Acanthus and on coins usually attributed to Stageira or Methone.

The method of production for this stater is also of interest. Instead of a occurring as a single event, striking was performed in three stages, with the application of the large center punch being followed by two flanking impressions by a smaller punch. This three-step minting usually caused some unevenness in the obverse field. Many other staters were produced in this three-step manner, though in some cases the second and third strikings were performed with different punches.

The obverses for staters produced in this manner are diverse and appear to cover the full evolution of early electrum, ranging from extremely early pieces with no discernible obverse design (Weidauer 1-3) to those with fully developed designs, including (at least) the present issue, ones portraying joined lion and bull protomes, joined lion protomes with a lotus flower, a human headed, a winged bull, the stag of Phanes, joined gorgon heads, joined, facing lion heads, two ram heads, a kneeling ram, a lion forepart, confronted lion heads, the recumbent lion of Miletus, a charging bull, a seated pantheress(?), a lying horse and a horse protome.

The veiled portrait of Arsinoe II, the sister-wife of King Ptolemy II, was iconic in the Hellenistic Age and set the standard for the presentation of later Ptolemaic women and many other monarchs who issued coins throughout the Mediterranean world.

Soon after Arsinoe II died in July, 270 B.C., she was deified and a new cult was established in her honour as Thea Philadelphus ('brother-loving goddess'). Coins mainly of large denominations – usually gold octodrachms and silver decadrachms – were soon produced in her honour. The octodrachm, a mnaiemon or one-mina piece apparently worth 100 silver drachms, continued to be struck under successive Ptolemaic kings for about 150 years or more.

The portrait shows a noble woman of impeccable pedigree, the ideal of Greek womanhood. Her status as a queen is attested by her jeweled diadem and her divinity is confirmed by the lotus scepter at her shoulder and the ram's horn that curls behind her ear. The reverse is also devoted to the deified queen. The inscription ΑΡΣΙΝΟΗΣ ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦΟΥ ('[coin] of Arsinoe, brother-lover') celebrates her sibling relationship with Ptolemy II, who issued this octodrachm. The double cornucopia is thought to be the queen's personal badge, yet in a larger sense it symbolized the idea that the Lagid rulers were the source of renewal, bounty and fertility.

Though most octodrachms of Arsinoe II were struck at the main Ptolemaic mint in Alexandria, this rare piece was struck at the provincial mint of Joppa. It belongs to a series that was produced at five Phoenician & Palestinian mints – Tyre, Sidon, Ake-Ptolemais, Joppa and Gaza, which typically bear the date of issue. All five of these mints struck coins in year 33, equating 253/2 B.C. Obverse die links in this year are known for octodrachms of Joppa and Tyre, suggesting that in some cases, at least, production may have been shared.

The large and complex series of coins issued by Ptolemy III (246-222 B.C.) for a certain Berenice has been intensively studied in recent years. The most distinctive issue is a large silver coin traditionally described as an Attic-weight dodekadrachm (12 drachms), and more recently as a Ptolemaic-weight pentekaidekadrachm (15 drachms).

There is no question that weights of these coins favour their classification as pentekaidekadrachms, as they are perfect for 15 Ptolemaic drachms, yet they are roughly equal to 12.5 Attic drachms – a significant overage in weight that is hard to explain. Yet, concerns linger as to why the Ptolemaic weight standard would have been employed at this time in Alexandria (the presumed mint of this issue) since that standard had not been in use there since the reign of Ptolemy I (305-282 B.C.). The answer may lie in the innovative nature of the Berenice series, which appears to include coins struck both to the Ptolemaic and the Attic weight standards.

Another question raised in recent years is which Berenice is honoured: Berenice II, the wife of Ptolemy III, or Berenice Syra, the king's sister? The traditional view is that the king's wife is honoured, but Hazzard has suggested it may be his sister. He sees the coins as products of the Third Syrian War (Laodicean War), which began not long after the death of the Seleucid King Antiochus II in 246 under mysterious circumstances.

His death caused a dynastic crisis, for Antiochus II had two wives, the Seleucid Laodice and the Ptolemaic Berenice Syra, both of whom had borne him children who were considered legitimate heirs to the Seleucid throne. However, when Berenice Syra and her son were murdered in 246, Ptolemaic claims to the Seleucid throne were eliminated and Ptolemy III responded by invading Seleucid territories. His campaign was successful, but ground to a halt when domestic crises forced him to return to Egypt. In 241, Ptolemy III made peace with Seleucus II, who in the meantime had become the new Seleucid king.

As laudable as Hazzard's suggestion may be, the case for Berenice II, a queen in her own right, is perhaps stronger. She had married Ptolemy III in about 246, the eventful year of Berenice Syra's death, and throughout the Third Syrian War she ruled Egypt in his absence. Perhaps more important, Berenice's portrait bears no symbols to suggest she was deceased. On the earlier coinage for the deceased Arsinoe II, the bust is adorned with the divine attributes of a ram's horn and a lotus scepter. Neither is present on the Berenice coinage, and though Berenice II was alive throughout her husband's reign, Berenice Syra was deceased.

Foreword to the JD collection of Roman Republican Coins

The first part of the JD collection, which consisted of Aes Grave, was sold in NAC 64, on 17 May 2012; an introduction that describes JD as a collector can be found there on p. 76. We then stated that there would be two further parts, but it has been decided to divide each of these two parts into two sessions, as is usual in NAC auction catalogues.

In the present sale we have an interesting selection of Republican silver and bronze, as well a few selected gold pieces. These coins illustrate the entire range of Republican issues from the late 3rd century BC to the time of Augustus. The first section contains coins that are more individually important, while the second session includes coins that are often real rarities but are generally more accessible. Among the coins we would like to point out are the following personal favourites.

In the first session there is a very rare Denarius with the letter H (Cr. -, lot 425); the very rare anonymous Dupondius (Cr. 56/1, lot 413); and the denarius of Marc Antony with a provenance of the Vidal Quadros y Ramon and Brunacci collections (Cr. 516/2, lot 513).

In the second session we have the As of the anchor and Q series (Cr. 86B/1, lot 1021); the denarius from the Trau collection of Livineius Regulus with a portrait of Caesar (Cr. 494/24, lot 1261 and the historic aureus of Vibius Varus with the countermark of the Este family collection, which comes from Hamburger sale 95, 1932, lot 289 (Cr. 494/34, lot 1267).

We would like to note that both parts of this collection have been divided so that all coins with the same main Crawford number are in a single part; there are no overlaps between the catalogues. For example, all the different types of Cr. 494 can be found in this catalogue while all those of Cr. 480 will appear in the forthcoming part III. However all the Crawford numbers found in this and the following catalogue are divided between the 2 sessions, as has been determined by the experts of NAC, to whom we owe a debt of gratitude for their tireless efforts.

For the staff of Numismatica Ars Classica and for Roberto Russo in particular, it was a great pleasure to be able to work on the JD collection. In its entirety, the collection consists of over 1200 coins and its bronze component represents the most important group ever offered at a public sale after the celebrated RBW collection. As we discussed in the preface of our catalogue 61, Roman Republican struck bronze coinage is very often overlooked by collectors, undeservedly so for it actually represents an extremely important and fascinating part of the Republican series. A collection such as this, thanks to its completeness in bronze and silver, manages to capture and reconstruct monetary circulation in the Republican period in the most extraordinary way, and this is what in our eyes makes it extremely fascinating. We have reflected on the bronze part of the collection, but this should not mislead the reader because the whole collection is of utmost interest and it conveys the passion, the competence and the sheer determination of the collector who built it through almost 40 years of collecting. The number of exceedingly rare and elusive coins is staggeringly high and for this we can congratulate the collector who had the competence to understand that in some cases he was presented with an unmissable opportunity to acquire coins that he would likely never have seen again on the market. Just three of the many examples of his great foresight and understanding are the extremely rare drachm (Crawford 26/2, lot 401), the exceedingly rare sestertius of Licinius Nerva (Crawford 454/5, lot 483) which formerly belonged to the Nicolas Collection, and the extremely rare quinarius of Pinarius Scarpus (Crawford 546/8, lot 1320).

Not all of the coins are in a perfect state of preservation, but the collector's goal was to have a collection as complete as possible, a feat that he has accomplished perfectly. For commercial reasons we have decided to divide the struck coinage of the collection into two parts each subdivided into two sessions as is usual with NAC catalogues, quite frankly this was a decision that rather displeased us since to have presented the collection in its entirety would have rendered it all the more fascinating, but the market and its tendencies demand certain choices.

We are sure that it will give collectors great pleasure to navigate their way through the JD collection and we hope that the coins' new owners will have the same passion and tenacity as JD and that they will likewise experience just as much pleasure in owning and studying them as him.

Historia Numorum Italy 267.

Of the highest rarity, only the third specimen known. An issue of great fascination and importance missing in all the major collections. Toned and good very fine 20'000

This is the first time that this extremely rare coin has appeared in a public auction since 1869 when the San Giorgio collection piece was offered in an auction in Paris. The image of a second specimen was published by Bahrfeldt in RIN 1900. In the same article the great scholar reports that such coin was offered to Imhoof-Blumer by Rollin & Feuadent in Paris, but that he had to pass on it due to the very high price requested.

We have decided to share Rutter's opinion who in Historia Numorum Italy attributes these coins to the Naples mint contrary to Crawford who assigns them to the mint of Metapontum. That said however, we have decided to refer to the coin as an obol and not as a litra as suggested by both Rutter and Crawford. The reasons for this decision are very simple: we obviously agree that this coin belongs to Crawford's series 13, which was intended for trades with Magna Grecia. On this basis, it seems only logical that we refer to it as an obol and not a litra. Its weight and its general appearance are consistent with coeval obols of Camapianian mints such as: Fistelia, Peripoloi Pitanaï and Allifae, which most probably were circulating along with this coin. Obviously the production of such a small denomination did not have any commercial purpose, but, as my father rightly argued in Numismatica Sottovoce, the Romans would never overlook practicality or propaganda and for these reasons one can assume that they decided to produce, together with the didrachm, also this nominal to which the local population of Campania and South Italy in general were accustomed.

We are not sure whether the denomination litra is correct. Prior to 1984 only one specimen of this coin was known, in the Museo Archeologico of Naples. That year a second specimen, supposedly coming from Spain, appeared in a sale of Credit Suisse Bern. Since that time, at least six or seven specimens have appeared in the trade, all presumably with the same origin. RBW has suggested in NAC sale 61 that this is a silver As.

This coin belong to an anonymous light series which includes triens, quadrans and sextans. In our opinion, this series was not identified by Crawford. The coins in this series are always overstruck and almost always on Sardo-Punic coins. Not only does this serve as unequivocal proof that they should be dated slightly after 212 and that the mint is Sardinian, but it also confirms the fiduciary value of bronze and proves that the light and heavy series were entirely contemporaneous. The Sardinian populations were accustomed to a fiduciary system which would explain why they decided to use the flans of the abundant sardo-punic bronze coins already at their disposal rather than melt them down to produce new flans of more precise weight.

RBW rightly states that this denarius is rarer than the corresponding aureus, Cr. 505/1.

Plutarch held Cassius in low regard, describing him as a man who was not well liked and who ruled his soldiers through fear. He says: "...Cassius was known to be a man of violent and uncontrolled passions, whose craving for money had often tempted him to stray from the path of justice, and it therefore seemed natural that his motive for fighting, wandering about the empire and risking his life was not to win liberty for his fellow-countrymen, but to secure some great place for himself." Plutarch has precisely the opposite to say of Cassius' co-conspirator: "Brutus' virtues, on the other hand, made him popular with the rank and file, beloved by his friends, and admired by the nobility, while even his enemies found it impossible to hate him." With this in mind one can imagine the simmering conflict between the two leaders, with Cassius being increasingly resentful of Brutus' popularity while he himself suffered from doing the lion's share of the hard work, regardless of how it tarnished his reputation. In point of truth, their rivalry no less significant than the one being experienced by their opponents, Marc Antony and Octavian. By the time they met at Sardis and were hailed emperor by their troops, the strains of partnership reached an intolerable pitch. Plutarch states: "...as often happens in great enterprises in which a large number of friends and commanders are engaged, there had been some sharp differences and mutual accusations had been exchanged. So...their first action was to meet in a room face to face. The doors were shut, and with no one else present the two men first began blaming one another and then fell to recriminations and counter-charges. These soon led to indignant reproaches and tears, and their friends, who were amazed at the vehemence and bitterness of their anger, were afraid that the quarrel might end in violence." This confrontation occurred just before Brutus departed to campaign disastrously in Lycia and Cassius set out to capture Rhodes, which he did successfully, but with extreme severity. We may be sure this denarius was struck after Cassius' defeat of the Rhodians, for the reverse depicts an aplustre, a ship ornament that symbolized naval victory. The flowers at the extremities of the ornament suggest Rhodes since the rose had been the symbol of that island for many centuries. Its symbolism is sealed when the other issue of this legate is considered: it shows a crab holding an aplustre in its claws, above a loose diadem and a rose. This rose is a certain reference to Rhodes, and it appears below the crab, the badge of the island of Cos, near where decisive battle took place. The loosened diadem might symbolize the kingship Cassius claimed to have undone at Rhodes (Plutarch, Brutus, 30) or it could be a reference to the undoing of Julius Caesar's tyranny some two years before.

This denarius is one of the surprising rarities of the Imperial series, with only a handful known to have survived. Almost inexplicably, more aurei appear to be known of this issue than denarii. Its design types are ideal for the Republican cause at the time: the head of Libertas paired with a trophy of arms and armour. While Crawford dates this issue to 43-42 B.C., Sear proposes it was struck in the summer of 42 B.C., when Brutus and Cassius met at Sardes.

With the conflict between Octavian and the Republicans gaining final momentum, Brutus and Cassius met at Smyrna early in 42, and then at Sardes in the summer. By the time of their second meeting the strains of their partnership had reached an intolerable pitch. Plutarch writes: "...as often happens in great enterprises in which a large number of friends and commanders are engaged, there had been some sharp differences and mutual accusations had been exchanged. So...their first action was to meet in a room face to face. The doors were shut, and with no one else present the two men first began blaming one another and then fell to recriminations and counter-charges. These soon led to indignant reproaches and tears, and their friends, who were amazed at the vehemence and bitterness of their anger, were afraid that the quarrel might end in violence."

It is always quite difficult to assert the number of specimens known of an issue and sometimes it would be better to be more careful: in RBW part II we stated that only five were known of this issue and that the RBW one was the only one in private hands. Unfortunately, when we started cataloguing the JD collection we realized that one more was known....

In 40 B.C., when this aureus is believed to have been struck, Octavian had returned from the Battle of Philippi and began the thankless task of settling some 40,000 veterans on their promised lands. As Octavian acquired land in Italy by force, his popularity suffered, and Marc Antony's wife Fulvia and brother Lucius Antonius preyed upon his misfortune with political attacks that stirred the veterans of Antony against those of Octavian.

In 41 B.C. Lucius led his brother's veterans against Octavian, who quickly got the upper hand and forced Lucius to take refuge in Perusia. Thus began the Perusine War (41-40 B.C.). It had the potential to spark a new civil war, but was neutralized when the threat of starvation caused Lucius to surrender in February of 40 B.C. However, Antony was concerned by this event, and became even more alarmed when his wife and brother died soon afterward and Octavian seized power in Gaul upon the death of Antony's governor.

Antony sailed to Brundisium to settle matters with Octavian in October of that year. The prospect for reconciliation was greatly reduced when Antony was refused entry to the harbor by Octavian's commander, to which Antony responded with a siege of Brundisium. Fortunately, the triumvirs settled their differences. The resulting pact confirmed Antony's control of the East and Octavian's control of the West, and theoretically bound the men through the marriage of Antony to Octavian's sister, Octavia.

This rare aureus of the moneyer Q. Voconius Vitulus was struck in the midst of these events. His coins bear on their obverse the portrait of Octavian or the deified Julius Caesar, making it clear where his allegiance lay. Though the inscriptions inform us that Vitulus held the status of quaestor designate, nothing else is known of his life. Some of his issues – including the aureus offered here – show a lituus beside the portrait, an indication that both Caesar and Octavian had held the augurship. The reverse type of a standing calf is strictly personal, being a punning allusion to the cognomen Vitulus, which means calf.

Caius Antonius had long been active in Caesarean politics, and he became deeply entrenched in the years 44 to 42 B.C. In 44 he was elected to the priestly college of the pontifices through the efforts of Julius Caesar, and after the dictator's murder he worked tirelessly to secure his brother Marc Antony's authority in Rome. While he comes across as an unfortunate soul, Caius must have been ambitious, for he did not reject his brother's effort to get him appointed governor of Macedon late in November, 44 B.C. – an act that amounted to a direct challenge to Brutus, who already occupied the region.

Brutus defended Macedon by blockading Caius at the port of Apollonia in March, 43. He was able to convince Caius' armies at Dyrrhachium and Apollonia to desert to his side, and through vigorous actions, he was able to keep Caius at bay until he surrendered. The worst was yet to come, though. As tensions continued to rise between the two factions, the Caesareans executed the orator Cicero. This silenced one of the great, outspoken voices against the Caesareans, but it seemed to have a direct response in the execution of Caius Antonius, who was still in captivity at that time.

Caius' death not only sent a message to the supporters of Antony and Octavian, but it must have assuaged Marcus Tullius Cicero, the son of the orator, who had fought valiantly for Brutus during the siege of Caius' armies in Apollonia. Beyond these historical accounts, little remains to testify to the life of Caius, except this small issue of denarii, presumably struck in 43 B.C. at a mint traveling with him in Illyricum.

Sextus Pompey was the first Roman to use dynastic imagery on coinage. This crucial step was taken in an age when the senate and traditions were losing ground to the cult of personality. The careers of the recent warlords Marius, Sulla, Crassus, Caesar, and Sextus' own father, Pompey Magnus, had benefited disproportionately from the strength of their charisma. In 42 B.C., when aurei of portrait type originally were struck, Antony, Octavian, Lepidus, Brutus, Cassius, and Sextus Pompey all were fighting for supremacy. Thus, this issue sets an enormously important precedent with Sextus honouring his family in so complete a manner. He and his brother Cnaeus earlier had initiated that practice by portraying their deceased father on denarii as early as 45-44 B.C., but here Sextus takes it a step further by portraying himself with his deceased brother and father. The issue amounts to an exhibition of his pedigree, as well as a nostalgic call to arms for all who had thus far served the Pompeian cause. Both Antony and Octavian made use of the coinage to advertise their relationship with the murdered Julius Caesar, a publicity war that was won by Caesar's nephew and heir, Octavian. But Antony took the practice to a level even beyond Sextus Pompey by representing living relatives on his coinage. Lacking a pedigree that was comparable with Octavian or Sextus Pompey, Antony pursued the next-best option by promoting his active dynasty, for the coins bore portraits of his brother, his son, and perhaps three of his four wives. On this aureus we find the only coin portrait of Sextus Pompey; it is shown within an oak wreath, traditionally an award for those who had saved the life of a Roman citizen, which must relate to the many lives he saved by taking in political refugees who escaped the Caesarean proscriptions. On the reverse the portraits of Pompey Magnus and Cnaeus Pompey are flanked by priestly objects, a lituus and a tripod, which represent the priesthoods to which they had been appointed.

This denarius from a mint in Spain, perhaps Colonia Patricia, ranks among the great rarities in the Augustan series. We are fortunate that this example is well preserved, for it reveals that the mythical figure floating above the capricorn is a male – something that heretofore has not been known with certainty. Specimens tend to be heavily worn, and in most references the figure is described as female, or, at best, with uncertainty. If a female, the figure would likely be Eos or Aurora, goddesses often who in various traditions represented the dawn, or the morning wind. Following this, Mattingly suggested Aurora alluded to the hour of Augustus' birth since it appears above the capricorn (the emperor's birth sign) and Augustus was born just before the sunrise on September 23, 63 B.C. However, this clear example renders that attractive theory impossible. Instead we must identify the figure as Zephyrus, a son of Eos, who symbolized the west spring wind. He holds aloft a billowed scarf, though in some examples of Roman art (where he is identified with Favonius, representing the breeze of springtide) he is shown bearing flowers in the folds of his robe. The interpretation of this type now becomes more challenging. Since the denarius was struck c. 18-16 B.C. it may celebrate Augustus' safe return in 19 B.C. to Rome after a three-year absence to Sicily, then Greece, and finally Asia. But if so, the god of the western wind would not have been the most appropriate allusion. We might consider, however, that since this coin was struck in Spain, the western wind might have been a more natural association even if it was not technically correct. Another possibility is that it heralds Augustus' next absence from Rome, from 16 to 13 B.C.; however, that journey was to Gaul and Germany, and unless Augustus began his journey by sailing from Ostia to a Gallic port, such as Massalia, the type would not be relevant.

Though the Romans traditionally had considered the hereditary monarchies of the Greeks and Persians to be a degenerate form of government, they were soon to embrace the same principles. As Rome made this great transformation from a republic to an empire in which powerful individuals ruled without the consent of the senate, it was natural for the concept of dynasty to emerge. The first Roman to use dynastic imagery on coinage was Sextus Pompey, who portrayed his deceased father on denarii as early as 45-44 B.C. and who showed himself, his father and his brother on aurei of 42 B.C. But since both of these relatives were dead, the coinage was little more than an exhibition of his pedigree. Marc Antony took the concept to the next level when he began to depict his living relatives on coins not long after Julius Caesar was murdered. In doing so, Antony presented an active dynasty, for the coins bore portraits of several relatives, including his brother, his son, and perhaps three of his four wives. Augustus was not so bold as Antony, and his cautious, methodical approach to introducing monarchy proved more successful: it quietly emerged as a by-product of his increasing auctoritas, whereas Antony shamelessly advertised his family in the manner of an Oriental potentate. Augustus waited more than three decades, until 13 B.C., to make his first public expression of dynasty on coinage. Even then, in that same year, Cassius Dio tells us Augustus was nervous about public demonstrations of dynasty, for when Tiberius, then Consul, placed the seven-year-old Gaius Caesar at the emperor's side at public games, Augustus showed his displeasure to those in the crowd who offered praise, and he later reprimanded Tiberius for having placed his eldest grandson at his side (Dio LIV, 27). We are fortunate to have here the centrepiece of Augustus' effort to represent his dynasty on coinage – a rare denarius showing on its obverse the portrait of Augustus and on its reverse portraits of his daughter Julia and her two sons at that time, Gaius Caesar and Lucius Caesar. The dynastic display is completed with another denarius showing the portrait of Julia in the guise of the goddess

Diana, and with several coins depicting Marcus Agrippa, the husband of Julia and the father of Gaius and Lucius.

When Caligula became emperor he did so as the lone-surviving male of the lines of Augustus and Germanicus; though his three sisters were still alive, he had lost both parents and both brothers during the reign of Tiberius. His father had died under mysterious circumstances and the rest fell during the family's contest for power against Tiberius and his prefect Sejanus. Since Caligula's claim to power rested upon his membership in the Julio-Claudian family, early in his reign he tried to curry favour by taking a journey to the islands of Potnia and Pandateria to gather the ashes of his mother Agrippina and his eldest brother Nero Caesar. (His brother Drusus Caesar died of starvation in prison, and none of his remains survived.) The seas were stormy, and the perilous nature of his journey only amplified the appearance of Caligula's devotion to the memory of his family. As part of this programme of honouring his ill-fated relatives, Caligula issued this aureus with the portrait of his mother, who for the decade after Germanicus' death had been Tiberius' greatest critic, and his most persistent opponent. On this aureus her facial features are similar to those of Caligula – a feature that seems to combine family resemblance and a programmatic desire to show the kinship between the new emperor and his mother.

The death of Tiberius in March, 37 left Rome with two heirs to the throne – his great-nephew Caligula and his grandson Tiberius Gemellus. The elder and apparently craftier of the two was Caligula, who attracted the allegiance of Sertorius Macro, who in 31 had replaced Sejanus as Praetorian prefect. With the help of Macro, Caligula was able to bar Tiberius Gemellus from any meaningful role in government before he eventually had him executed.

From the very outset Caligula's authority was based on his support by the Praetorians, which represents the first time the guards backed a candidate for the throne. The approval of the senate was not open for serious discussion since the Praetorians had chosen their candidate and he was presented to the senate as a fait accompli.

The adlocutio cohortis sestertii are clear reflections of the special arrangement between the new emperor and the Praetorians. Caligula immediately paid each of the Praetorians the award of 1,000 sestertii promised to them by Tiberius in his will, and for good measure he doubled that amount from his own purse. The precedent he and Tiberius established was dangerous, and only four years later his successor Claudius felt it necessary to offer a significantly larger amount, 15,000 sestertii per guard.

The reverse scene makes clear a pact of mutual support, and the contrast between young Caligula, togate upon a platform, and the standard-bearing praetorians in full military attire could not have been lost on those who handled these coins: Caligula would be free to pursue his personal agendas as emperor knowing he was backed by the guards.

Even more alarming to those who read the subtext of the design was the absence of the SC. Though the precise role of this formulaic abbreviation for senatus consulto or senatus consultum is not known, it is generally agreed that it acknowledges the senate in some capacity (even if it was merely nostalgic). For it to be absent from this bronze type when it was included on all other of Caligula's imperial aes, can only mean that it was intended to send a clear message to the senate that the emperor's relationship with the guard was the bedrock of his administration.

From the Biaggi collection.

Though Vitellius' regime was short-lived, his coinage betrays his obsession with dynasty, for he issued coins honouring his deceased father, Lucius Vitellius, and two of his children, thought to have been named Vitellius Germanicus and Vitellia. Coins for his children include aurei and denarii from Rome, denarii from Lugdunum, and extremely rare aurei and asses from a Spanish mint.

The children portrayed on this aureus were born to Vitellius and his second wife, Galeria Fundana. Vitellius had left his family in Rome when, under Galba, he took up his new command in Germany. They remained safe throughout the fast and violent changes of regime. When Vitellius was recognized as emperor by the senate, his son was taken to Lugdunum to meet him upon his arrival from Germany. The boy, who apparently was about six years old at the time, was given the agnomen Germanicus and was shown to the soldiers as proof that a dynasty had been founded to replace the Julio-Claudians.

There was relatively little time left for father and son to share after that glorious event. Suetonius indicates that the boy perished with his father upon his downfall, while others suggest he was executed afterward, in 70, on orders of the praetorian prefect Licinius Mucianus. Nothing is known of the girl until after her father's reign had ended, when Suetonius reports that Vespasian arranged an excellent marriage for her and provided her with a wedding gown and dowry.

Vitellius had at least one other child, a son, Petronianus, by his first wife, Petronia. He apparently had sight only in one eye and was poisoned long before his father ascended the throne. Suetonius indicates that most people shared the belief that Vitellius had murdered the boy.

Vespasian, 69 – 79

- 621 Vespasian, 69-70, AV 7.10 g. IMP CAESAR VESPASIANVS AVG Laureate head r., with drapery on l. shoulder. Rev. IVDAEA – RECEPTA Jewess standing l. in attitude of mourning; before palm-tree. C –. BMC –. RIC –. CBN –. Hendin –. Calicó –.

An apparently unique and unrecorded issue of tremendous historical importance and fascination. A very interesting portrait and a reverse composition of great symbolism. Struck on a broad flan with a light reddish tone, minor traces of edge filing and a graffito (Λ Λ) below the exergual line, otherwise very fine

50'000

This IVDAEA RECEPTA aureus of Vespasian is an extraordinary and unexpected discovery in a series that for centuries has been the subject of intensive study. Not only is it perhaps the first issue that Vespasian struck to celebrate the victory in Judaea, but its inscription makes it unique in a series that normally describes Judaea as having been captured (capta) or conquered (devicta), or which symbolically imply the defeat of the Jewish rebels.

Compared with the more usual Roman proclamations, this recepta issue presents a gentler view of Rome's triumph over rebels in the Jewish War. It indicates that Judaea was acquired or "received" into the empire, or that it was "taken possession of" by Vespasian. In some sense it suggests that Judaea had been lost, but that with the re-establishment of Roman authority the province had been received, once again, into the empire.

Though recepta occurs on other Roman coins, instances are rare. The chief proponent of this wording was Octavian (Augustus), who used it on coinage to describe some of his more significant acquisitions: the province of Asia (ASIA RECEPTA), Armenia (ARMENIA RECEPTA), and legionary standards that had been lost to the Parthians (SIGNIS RECEPTIS).

The comparatively gentle tenor of recepta is revealed especially on coins struck by Claudius soon after his accession. He issued aurei and denarii celebrating the fact that the praetorian guards had "received" him into their fortified camp and had protected him as he awaited confirmation from the senate during the chaos that followed the murder of Caligula. One type, inscribed PRAETOR RECEPT, shows Claudius clasping hands with a praetorian guard; the other, inscribed IMPER RECEPT, shows Claudius or a soldier standing within the walls of the camp.

With the discovery of this new type, we may count Vespasian among the emperors favourably disposed toward this wording. Also known for Vespasian are sestertii struck at Rome in 71 inscribed SIGNIS RECEPTIS that show the emperor standing on a platform, receiving an aquila from Victory. These rare and historical coins refer to the recovery of military standard(s) lost during the nationalist revolt sparked by the Batavian chief Julius Civilis during in the final weeks of the reign of Vitellius. The revolt persisted well into the reign of Vespasian, who struggled through 70 to defeat Civilis. Germany and Gaul suffered great destruction at the hand of the rebel army, and the standard delivered by Victory is presumably one of the XV Primigenia, a legion that was massacred by its German auxiliaries after it had surrendered to Civilis.

We find a similar tenor on this aureus devoted to the war in Judaea. Germany, Gaul and Judaea were all provinces that Vespasian had brought back under the Roman yoke, for not only did the final victories in each occur after Vespasian had established his regime, but the general-turned-emperor had personally led armies in each conflict.

The technical features of this aureus suggest it was struck very early in Vespasian's reign. The portrait is finely engraved, without the usual protruding chin and fleshy jowls. It is uncharacteristic for Vespasian's portraits, and it almost certainly was engraved before the new emperor's features had been standardized.

The reverse design is exceptional. Its composition closely resembles the IVDAEA DEVICTA issue, for which this recepta issue may have been the prototype. David Hendin has observed that although the figure of Judaea accords well with other depictions, her posture is unusual with crossed legs. He also notes that the fronds of the palm tree are less clearly defined than on the later issues. Just as with the unusual portrait, the design peculiarities of the reverse mark this as a very early aureus produced before the features of the Judaea issues had been firmly established.

The obverse inscription IMP CAESAR VESPASIANVS AVG occurs on precious metal coins of numerous mints, including Rome, Lugdunum, Tarraco, an uncertain mint in Spain, Ephesus, Alexandria, Judaea, Antioch, and one or more uncertain military mints. The heavy lettering without well-defined serifs accords well with the earliest issues of the Rome mint, though the dies could have been engraved by an artist trained at the Rome and the coin struck at a moving military mint. If it was struck at Rome, this gentler tone might originally have been taken since the capital was far removed from the war in Judaea (though the capital had experienced its own share of atrocities in the civil war). Wherever this extraordinary aureus was struck, it must have been immediately recognized that a sterner tone was required toward Judaea, which brought an end to this short-lived recepta issue.

Two incise letters appear on the exergue of the reverse of this coin. This graffiti consist of the two Greek letters, plausibly twice the letter Lambda (Λ). The practice of graffiti on coins (one or more incised letters, monograms or symbol) seems to be a phenomenon confined mainly to the Levant. Deliberate incisions first appear on silver issues of the Persian period (fifth-fourth centuries BC) and become common during Hellenistic times (fourth-third centuries BC). The most detailed review of the phenomenon appears in J. Elayi and A. Lemaire, Graffiti et contremarques ouest-sémitiques sur les monnaies grecques et proche-orientales, GlauX 13, Milano 1998 (see especially pages 15–19). There are no fixed rules for the placement of the graffiti but they are primarily incised on empty space on the coin where they can be more evidently noted.

It has been noted, in later periods, that circa 5% of Syro-Phoenician provincial tetradrachms dated to first century BC to the third century AD, have graffiti which appears on empty spaces on the coin (see H. Gitler and M. Ponting, The Silver Coinage of Septimius Severus and His Family 193–211 AD: A Study of the Chemical Composition of the Roman and Eastern Issues, GlauX 16, Milano 2003, pp. 97–99). This phenomenon is also well attested on Late Roman and Byzantine solidi as has been applied discussed by Bijovsky (G. Bijovsky, A Hoard of Byzantine Solidi from Bet She'an in the Umayyad Period, Revue Numismatique 158 [2002], pp. 178–180), and on the Umayyad gold dinars after the reform by 'Abd al-Malik (cf. A. Berman, Sgraffiti, in V Tzaferis, Excavations at Capernaum. Volume I: 1978–1982, Winona Lake, IN, 1989, pp. 181–190).

The example of the Bet She'an hoard (northern Israel) is quite amazing since it includes two hundred and sixty-two solidi with graffiti, that represent a 34.88% of the whole group of 751 solidi dated to the reigns of Phocas, Heraclius, Constans II and Constantine IV (Bijovsky, op. cit., p. 179).

It is evident that graffiti may have had a dissimilar function in different periods and several theories have been suggested regarding their meaning. It has been proposed that they represent initials or letter combinations that served as personal marks or secret identifications of owners, moneychangers and merchants (see H. Holzer, Christian and Secular Graffiti on Late Roman and Byzantine Gold Pieces, Numismatic Review 2 [1944], pp. 33 and 36). They likewise can be considered as aids to counting and reckoning (Berman, op. cit., p. 184). However, a thorough overall study of the phenomenon will be needed before the function of graffiti is fully understood.

The mint of this early seemingly unique aureus of Vespasian has been identified by RIC as that of Antiochia.

The 'civic crown' on the reverse traditionally had been presented to Romans who in battle saved the life of another citizen, though it was also awarded for saving a life under other circumstances, or for saving the state. It was one of the greatest public honours, and recipients received benefactions ranging from the practical to the honorary, such as having spectators rise as they entered a public theatre. The crown was awarded to Augustus in 27 B.C. as a reflection of his restoration of peace in the realm, by which he saved the lives of many Romans and preserved the state. By the reign of Claudius, however, the awarding of the corona civica seems to have become standard part of the accession honours.

This extraordinary sestertius belongs to the largest and most diverse series of bronzes that Titus produced as emperor. Issued in A.D. 80-81, it contained nineteen different reverse types for sestertii – a marked expansion over Titus' previous efforts. The diversity of types and the uniformly high quality of engraving suggest that Titus was focusing on bronze coinage in a way that had not been done since Vespasian's prodigious issue of 71.

Like many types in this series, this one depicting Pax had been carried over from earlier issues. It likely originated on middle bronzes of Galba (RIC 368-70, 414) and sestertii of Vitellius (RIC 117), only to be used extensively by Vespasian, both for himself and for issues he struck on behalf of Titus and Domitian. His first such issues were produced in 70, which were followed by annual re-issues in all but one year from 71 to 78. Upon becoming emperor, Titus continued to use this familiar type in 79, 80 and 81.

With the pedigree of this reverse going back to three emperors who were involved with the civil war, one can appreciate how well established it had become in the intervening dozen years. Titus clearly recognized that it was still essential to celebrate the peace that Rome was enjoying, largely due to the success of his father in overthrowing Vitellius and establishing the Flavian Dynasty.

The skeletal outline of the Circus Maximus in Rome today is only a faint indication of the grand structure that once was the focal point for entertainment in capital. This hippodrome is said to have been Rome's oldest stadium. It evolved from a simple racetrack between the Aventine and Palatine hills with no formal structure, to one incorporating wooden, and then stone benches, and finally a massive superstructure as seen on this sestertius.

Over time the area was decorated with monuments, statues, trophies, shrines, arcades, towers, porticoes, triumphal gates and arches. Gilded metae at each end of the spine (spina) of the sand racetrack glistened in the sun, and a tall obelisk of Ramesses II that Augustus had shipped to Rome in 10 B.C. served as the center piece of the spina.

Pliny the Elder describes the circus as able to accommodate 250,000 people, but this figure no doubt includes those viewing from the slopes of the flanking hills. However, at its peak in the mid-4th Century A.D. it is believed to have been able to seat more than 200,000 spectators.

The circus was damaged on many occasions, including by fire during the reigns of Augustus and Nero. Restorations to the structure, it seems, are celebrated on coinage. For this reason, Trajan issued sestertii depicting the hippodrome, which probably served as the prototype for Caracalla's issue since both show the structure from the same elevated perspective with simultaneous exterior and interior views.

A variety of events were held there, including parades, theatrical events, foot races, boxing and wrestling matches and equestrian contests. Bloody spectacles were also hosted, such as gladiatorial combats (ludi gladiatorii) and exotic animal hunts (venationes). Chariot racing (ludi circenses), however, was the most popular event held in the circus.

In Trajan's time two dozen races would have been held in a single day, with eight teams competing in each event. A race consisted of seven laps that could be completed in less than ten minutes. The chariots were usually drawn by teams of two, three or four horses. Occasionally there were teams of six horses, which certainly was more of a crowd-pleasing novelty than a practical event.

One of the best investments ever made by the Romans was their road system, which included at least 250,000 miles of roads designed for high-speed travel that was reliable virtually year-round. No less than eleven of these major roads entered Rome, giving rise to the phrase "all roads lead to Rome". The system gave the Romans a distinct advantage over their enemies in war and their partners in commerce; in essence, it gave them an unparalleled ability to grow and to maintain their empire. The construction of these super-roads was no mean feat: it required engineering expertise, time, and significant resources. It also required a powerful centralized government and a societal belief that the enormous short-term expenses of construction were justifiable in view of the long-term benefits that would accrue. With this in mind it is hardly surprising that the construction of roads (and other architectural feats, such as the building of aqueducts, harbours and temples) is commemorated on coinage. Trajan was never shy about using coinage for this purpose, and here he celebrates his via Traiana, a new road in Italy linking Beneventum and Brundisium. It took a path alongside the famous Appian Way, which by then had been used as a military highway for more than four centuries.

It is impossible to assess the influence Plotina had on her husband, Trajan, for she is scarcely mentioned in the ancient sources. If we are to believe Dio Cassius (68.5.5) and the far later Historia Augusta, she was a modest woman who, if anything, was a restraining force who insisted on high moral standards. Both relate a story that when Plotina entered the imperial palace for the first time as the wife of an emperor, she turned to those gathered at the steps and declared "I enter here such a woman as I would wish to be when I leave."

Despite her apparent moral rigor, she is chiefly remembered for her undying support for her husband's eventual successor, Hadrian. The Historia Augusta describes how Trajan was not particularly fond of Hadrian, but that Plotina insisted on his marriage to Sabina, the daughter of Trajan's niece Matidia.

The worst accusations, however, concern Plotina's role in assuring that Hadrian succeeded Trajan, who most sources suggest had made no provisions for Hadrian at the time of his death. Eutropius reports: "After Trajan's death Aelius Hadrian was appointed emperor, not, indeed, through any desire on the part of Trajan, but through the agency of Plotina, Trajan's wife, for Trajan, while he was still alive, had refused to adopt him although he was the son of his cousin." (Breviarium 8.6)

The sources present a wide array of scenarios. We are told that Plotina delayed the announcement of her husband's death so she could forge a letter of adoption that named Hadrian his successor, or that she lied about the content of the will. The Historia Augusta goes so far as to suggest that after Trajan was dead, Plotina had someone imitate his tired voice to proclaim Hadrian his successor.

Even the most flattering versions suggest Plotina went to great effort to convince Trajan, on his deathbed, to adopt Hadrian. The Historia Augusta and Cassius Dio suggest two other men, Trajan's brother-in-law L. Julius Servianus and his confidant L. Neratius Priscus, were his preferred heirs. It was also rumoured that he intended to name no candidate at all, but to leave it to the senate to appoint his successor.

If Plotina engineered the accession of Hadrian, she was one of the great architects of the Roman world, and changed the course of history in ways that might be hard to fathom. Hadrian's principate was surely unique, and his decision to reverse the expansionist policies of Trajan had a profound effect on the course of events.

According to Hill's careful analysis of the undated coins of Rome, this medallion belongs to the years 120-121, a high point in Hadrian's reign. He was by then optimistic enough to declare 121 the beginning of a new golden age in Rome, which he marked with games, a donative, and numerous coin types. The Genius of the Roman people, shown sacrificing on the reverse of this medallion, was an ideal representation for that new, golden age.

For a Grecophile like Hadrian, the dawning of a golden age under his rule involved the promotion of Greek culture. Hadrian had been infatuated with Greek ideals long before he became emperor – enough so to have earned the nickname Graeculus ('Greekling'). His first known visit to Greece had occurred a decade earlier, in 111-112, while en route to Trajan's Parthian campaign. During his visit Hadrian was made an honorary citizen of Athens and was elected archon eponymous, the city's most important magistracy. That year in Athenian history took the name of the 36-year-old future emperor.

Perhaps even more remarkable than this bronze's high level of artistry and medallion character is the fact that Hadrian is shown wreathed in grain, which implies an Eleusinian Mysteries connection. The meaning would have been clear, for the worship of Ceres-Demeter in Rome was both ancient and important, being inextricably tied to the Eleusinian Mysteries and celebrated annually with the Cerealia and the Ludi Cereales.

The secretive Mysteries were of great interest to Hadrian. Roman appreciation of these rites had a long and distinguished pedigree before Hadrian: Cicero and Augustus had been initiated, and Claudius had tried to move the rituals from Eleusis to Rome. Its most famous Roman benefactor, however, was Hadrian, who in 125 was initiated to the lower grade of mystes, and in 128 achieved the higher grade of epoptes ('one who has seen'). In later years, Marcus Aurelius and, seemingly, Gallienus, were also initiated.

Central to the Mysteries was Demeter's search for her daughter Persephone, who had been taken to Hades by Pluto. When she descended to Hades to find her daughter, the absence of the goddess of the earth caused what threatened to be an eternal winter. After divine intervention, Persephone was allowed to return to earth on the condition that she visited Hades every winter as the spouse of Pluto. Henceforth the change of the seasons was explained in terms of the descent and the return of Demeter.

Upon the death of Trajan in 117, power formally transferred to his alleged heir Hadrian, who was then governing Syria. In his new capacity Hadrian wintered in Asia Minor, and early in 118 marched westward to settle affairs along the Danube. He eventually arrived in Rome in July – nearly a year after he had been hailed emperor. Upon entering the Eternal City he bolstered his popularity by making a donative to the people, making grants to the poor children of Italy and by holding a triumph in honour of Trajan. He also cancelled debts and burned promissory notes in a general amnesty for tax arrears. This last act is celebrated on this rare and historical sestertius. The reverse shows Hadrian, or a lictor applying a torch to a heap of papers symbolic of the debts being cancelled. This rather elaborate version of this coin type shows three citizens with their arms outstretched in joy and gratitude. These documents (syngraphi) were burned in Trajan's Forum, where Hadrian erected a monument that bore the inscription "the first of all pincipes and the only one who, by remitting nine hundred million sesterces owed to the fiscus, provided security not merely for his present citizens but also for their descendants by this generosity".

The reverse inscription on this sestertius, RELIQUA VETERA HS NOVIES MILL ABOLITA, is of exceptional interest. It quite literally translates to "nine times a hundred thousand sestertii of outstanding debts cancelled". HS is a standard abbreviation for sestertii in Roman inscriptions, and, depending upon how it is referenced, it can refer to a single sestertius, a unit of one thousand sestertii, or a unit of one hundred thousand sestertii. In this case novies is an adverb meaning 'nine times', and thus it applies to the sestertius as a unit of one thousand sestertii. Some have logically suggested that in the context of this inscription the HS would have been an adjective with the thousand, or mille, being understood in terms of empire-wide taxes. If so, it would increase the named figure to 'nine times a hundred thousand units of one thousand sestertii', thus equating it to the figure of 900 million sestertii that is named on the monument inscription.

In any case, this is a remarkable instance of the denomination of the sestertius being named on a Roman coin – especially since the coin is of that very denomination. The 19th Century historian S. W. Smith artfully describes this important coin type as "...one of the most remarkable monuments of imperial munificence that can be found within the recording province of numismatic art."

The travels of Hadrian are poorly documented, and scholars have toiled to reconstruct them by using many different sources of evidence, not the least of which is coinage. In all likelihood Hadrian's first trip occupied the years 121 to 125, his second 128 to 132, and his third 134 to 136. Hill dates this sestertius to 136, in the year of his vicennalia and the last year of his final trip.

Like many 'travel' coins of Hadrian, this issue harkens back to earlier voyages – in this case visits to Mauretania presumed to have occurred in 123 and 128. Though the latter visit may have been largely administrative, the first perhaps was dominated by an effort to put down a disturbance (the motus maurorum) by the Mauri.

The reverse shows Hadrian holding a scroll (volumen) and raising his right hand before a lighted and garlanded altar, over which the personification of Mauretania pours a libation. She wears an elephant-scalp headdress, holds a vexillum and is accompanied by an animal – perhaps a calf – which lowers its head in a submissive posture, as if ready for sacrifice. In some of the many variants of this scene the animal is seated at the base of the altar and/or Mauretania is shown without the elephant-scalp.

Three other of Hadrian's coin types reference Mauretania. One shows Mauretania, holding one or two javelins, standing in the foreground before a horse, which she holds by the bridle. Another shows Mauretania standing to the side of a horse, which she leads by the reins. A third, inscribed EXERCITVS MAVRETANICVS SC, shows Hadrian on horseback saluting a procession of soldiers, some of whom carry standards.

25'000

From the Biaggi collection.

These two aurei are exceptional in several ways. Not only do they portray Hadrian in a youthful and idealized fashion, but they have reverse types that honor the emperor's adoptive parents Trajan and Plotina. Hill has shown convincingly that they belong to a series which must have been struck early in the reign of Hadrian's successor, Antoninus Pius. The context for this unorthodox series was the new emperor's stubborn efforts to persuade the senate to vote divine honours for Hadrian, by which Antoninus earned his epithet "Pius."

This bust type is distinctive and belongs to a separate category of Hadrianic portraiture: the emperor is fictitiously youthful and wears only a partial beard that culminates in two tufts at his jaw line. Understandably, Mattingly and Sydenham describe this portrait style as being of "exceptional beauty and distinction."

Comparison with sculptures in the round marks this style of portrait as Hadrian in the guise of Diomedes, the Trojan War hero who stole the Palladium from Troy, assuring a Greek victory in the epic siege. The Palladium reportedly was taken to Italy, either by the Trojan prince Aeneas or by Diomedes, who by one tradition returned it to Aeneas in Italy. By Hadrian's time the episode had numerous versions and was a core element of the Roman foundation mythology, making it a perfect marriage of this emperor's infatuation with Greece and his dedication to Rome.

These reverses, inscribed DIVIS PARENTIBVS ('to his parent deities'), show the jugate and confronted busts of Trajan and Plotina adorned with stars. A related aureus (Calico 1143) that must belong to this series portrays the divine parents, each accompanied by a star, on opposite sides of the coin. Two other reverse types paired with Hadrian as Diomedes recall the divine origins of Rome: ROMVLO CONDITORI ('Romulus the founder'), Romulus striding r.; and VENERI GENETRICI ('Venus who brings forth'), Venus standing. The remaining three reverse types in the series honour Jupiter, a god with imperial associations, and present Hadrian in a military context, presumably to showcase his military successes and to curry support with the army.

The appearance on coinage of Antinous, the favourite companion of the emperor Hadrian, is remarkable, for he was not related to the emperor by blood or marriage, and was never an heir-apparent. Indeed, Antinous is honoured only after his death and deification. Antinous' cult was wide-spread, and a great many busts were produced: at least 1,500 can be presumably attested, of which at least 115 survive today. His coinage was also substantial, with more than 30 mints striking approximately 150 different issues. Though most of these coins were struck during the reign of Hadrian, concentrating from 134 to 137, it is believed that a few mints continued to strike them as late as the reign of Marcus Aurelius, and that his hometown of Bithynium (Claudiopolis) perhaps issued them as late as the time of Caracalla.

When this medallion was struck in 179, eighteen-year-old Commodus was firmly established as heir to the throne of his aging father. The two emperors were together on the Danubian front for the campaign season of that year, but Marcus' health was by then so fragile that the war was conducted by Tarutienus Paternus, who likely battled the Quadi.

However, declining health did not prevent Marcus from devoting himself to the work of office. He appears to have ordered a systematic harassment of the Quadi and the Marcomanni to prevent them from tending to their flocks or cultivating the fields. Furthermore, Roman captives were recovered and German deserters, including three thousand Naristae, were welcomed within the borders of the empire. There were also victories in the realm of diplomacy with the Jazyges and the Buri.

After so many years of dedicated work both in Rome and on the northern front it must have been clear by 179 that failing health was now the emperor's greatest enemy. Indeed, by March, 180 the emperor had become fatally ill, dying on the 17th. Thus, we find the context for this medallion with its pictorial scene of an offering to Salus. The fact that this medallion type was also issued for Marcus during the period December, 178 to the spring of 179 (Gneecchi II, pl. 60, 10) suggests the present medallion must have been a companion piece, and thus belongs to the early months of 179.

This elaborate and well-executed type shows a devotee beneath a laurel(?) tree, leaning against a table to feed a serpent that entwines around a statuette of Salus. A vase, which may be an apothecary jar, and a laurel or flower garland rest upon the table; the crow or raven perched on the cross-beam below rounds out the scene as an allusion to Asclepius. This design was first used by Marcus in 164 (Gneecchi II, pl. 63, 3), and a related, though differently arranged, scene (Gneecchi III, pl. 149, 7) had been issued by Antoninus Pius in 138/9.

In acknowledging the debt this medallion owes to other art forms, such as painting and bas-relief sculpting, Tonybee notes that the design "...vividly recalls a small rosso antico relief in the Capitoline Museum: the only important point in which the relief differs from the medallion is that in the former the devotee is offering Salus fruit, while the snake helps itself from a patera held in Salus' hand."

The production of Roman medallions reached its apex under Commodus. Harold Mattingly noted: "The series of Roman medallions, which had been steadily swelling in volume since the reign of Hadrian, reached its flood under Commodus, sinking back, after him, into relative unimportance. The issue of these imperial gifts may be taken as a characteristic of the dynasty, used discreetly at first as a means of endearing the Emperor and house to a large circle of friends in Rome, but carried to such excess by the last Antonine as to remain suspect for some time after."

This medallion was issued near the end of Commodus' reign, by which time he clearly had become obsessed with the issuance of medallions. Its inscription cites the sixteenth renewal of his tribunician power and his assumption of the consulship for the sixth time, allowing it to be dated to A.D. 190-191.

Much was happening in this period. In 190 Commodus gave a donative to secure the loyalty of the praetorians after the fall of Cleander, the prefect who had been executed on a charge of plotting against the emperor. In 191 he gave thanks for the passing of a plague and strengthened his proclaimed ties to Jupiter, Hercules and Serapis as protectors against plots.

However, there does not appear to be anything in these events to account for this reverse, which shows Roma presenting a globe to Commodus, who is crowned by Victory as Felicitas stands in the background. Its meaning appears to be quite general – a reflection of the contentment and success of the emperor believed he had achieved.

Mattingly considered it to be an elaborate comment on the emperor's sixth consulship (which coincided with his 30th birthday), with Roma confiding her trust to Commodus, blessed by success and good fortune. The fact that the state goddess hands over a globe representing the world is a declaration that the care of the empire had been allocated to Commodus by divine order.

Wilhelm Froehner, curator at the Louvre and from 1863 to 1870 the personal advisor on antiquarian matters to the French King Napoleon III, suggested that the cuirass and shield upon which Roma sat represented a trophy of British armor. However, the British victory was celebrated in 184, and by the time this medallion was struck no longer would have been suitable for commemoration. More recent victories had occurred in Africa, yet it is perhaps best not to read anything into the armor and shield beyond it being part of a standard presentation of the national goddess.

The daughter of a nobleman who had campaigned alongside Marcus Aurelius against barbarians on the northern border of the empire, Crispina reportedly was an exceptionally beautiful woman, a fact which the portrait on this coin supports. She was married to the fifteen-year-old future emperor Commodus, but as he steadily became more paranoid and megalomaniacal, their relationship disintegrated, and they both partook in extramarital affairs. In 182 Crispina was banished to the island of Capri where she met her end by strangulation, presumably on the orders of her husband. The official reason given for her severe treatment was her adulterous activities, but more than likely it was because she, along with her sister-in-law Lucilla, was implicated in a failed plot to assassinate Commodus.

At first glance, the jugate busts on this aureus suggest it belongs to the dynastic series initiated by the Severans in 201, but the overriding theme of the coin is the defeat of Parthia in 198. This is shown not only by the explicit reverse type, but also by the obverse inscription, which describes the two emperors as invictii – unconquered and invincible.

Because Severus and Caracalla are also described as pii (dutiful and god-fearing), the coin must date to 201 or later, for only in that year did they adopt the title Pius, seemingly to reflect the membership they claimed to the dynasty founded long ago by Antoninus Pius. Thus, the issue may have been produced for the anticipated return of the royal family to Rome early in 202, following a nearly five-year absence in the East, during which they conquered the Parthians and oversaw affairs in the provinces.

Severus' return was no ordinary event: not only had the royal family been gone for five years, but the yearlong celebration of Severus decennalia, his tenth year of power, had begun and the royal wedding of Caracalla was planned. The imperial adventus was celebrated with games, spectacles and donativa to the people and to the praetorian guards, who Dio Cassius tells us each received ten aurei – perhaps including examples of this freshly minted type.

Ex Santamaria sale 23-24 October 1951, Magnaguti part IV, 171. From the Biaggi collection.

An impressive series of dynastic coins was issued for the Severans throughout 201 and into the early part of 202, presumably marking the fifth anniversary of the dynasty that Septimius Severus had formed by early 196. After so many years of civil war, Severus must have thought it appropriate to publicise his dynasty, and to advertise the stability that it represented to the Roman people. The variety of types is considerable, with the portraits of family members being shown in many combinations.

This aureus was struck in the name of Julia Domna, and on the reverse portrays her two sons, Caracalla and Geta. It is tailor-made as a dynastic type since the inscription AETERNIT IMPERI ('the eternity of the empire') equates the continuity of the empire with the continuity of the dynasty. The positioning of the boys' portraits is exactly as would be expected: the elder, Caracalla, is in the honorary position on the left wearing a laurel wreath to indicate his senior status as Augustus, and the younger, Geta, is shown bare-headed on the right to denote his lesser status as Caesar.

From the Jameson and Biaggi collection.

The reproduction from the cast of this coin in the Jameson plate is quite misleading since the edge of the cast were cut in a completely wrong way. It is also thank to the archive of the Biaggi collection that we could trace its provenance.

We would like to use this note to dispel some untruths written about Leo Biaggi de Blasiis in a recent auction catalogue. Firstly, it is not true that Biaggi was an agent of Mussolini in Spain with Franco, nor that he lived on a permanent basis in Spain. Instead Biaggi, a lover of hunting, had a large estate in Spain where he would invite the highest nobility and royalty in Europe for hunting excursions. Franco would have liked to have been invited, but Biaggi never did extend him an invitation, confiding to friends his disdain for the man whom he considered an assassin. As for the matter of Adolph Eichmann, it is true that Biaggi in his capacity as an official of the International Red Cross signed his expatriate document when he escaped to South America, but it is equally true that he did so unaware that he was a Nazi criminal. Finally, contrary to the claims in the catalogue it was not Biaggi's family who sold the collection after his death, it was in fact Biaggi himself. Indeed he sold his collection, a few years before he died, to the numismatist who had helped and supported him in building it, and who during this time had grown to become a very close friend.

A trusted administrator under the Severans, Macrinus rose to become one of two praetorian prefects under the emperor Caracalla. He took a leading role in the plot to murder his benefactor, having himself enlisted the assassin. Three days after Caracalla's assassination, Macrinus was nominated Augustus by the soldiers after pretending to show sorrow for his master's death. For a time he continued the war against the Parthians, but soon tired of it and sued for peace, offering the enemy large payments in exchange for a non-aggression pact. This did not bode well with the soldiers, who perhaps wanted to pursue the campaign and have an opportunity to claim their share of the legendary wealth of the East. Thus, many soldiers soon deserted to the cause of a new rival, the 14-year-old grandnephew of Julia Domna, Elagabalus, who was alleged to be an illegitimate son of Caracalla. When the opponents finally clashed near a small Syrian village outside Antioch, the forces of Elagabalus got the upper hand and Macrinus fled the field. He made his way in disguise as far as Calchedon before he was captured and executed.

Few emperors are known almost exclusively for their peculiarities and perversions, but on the short list of qualified applicants, Elagabalus rises to the top. The 19th Century antiquarian S.W. Stevenson, ever a delight for his artfully delivered comments, did not fail to deliver in his summary of Elagabalus whom he called: "...the most cruel and infamous wretch that ever disgraced humanity and polluted a throne...". Elagabalus and his family had lived in Rome during the reign of Caracalla, who was rumoured to have been Elagabalus' natural father. When Caracalla was murdered, his prefect and successor, Macrinus, recalled the family to their homeland of Syria. Upon arriving, Elagabalus assumed his role as hereditary priest of the Emesan sun-god Heliogabalus. For the Roman soldiers in the vicinity, who engaged in the common practice of solar worship, and who had fond memories of the slain Caracalla, Elagabalus was an ideal candidate for emperor. He soon was hailed emperor against Macrinus, who was defeated in a pitched battle just outside Antioch. Conservative Rome was introduced to their new emperor's eccentricities and religious fervour when they learned of his overland journey from Emesa to Rome, with a sacred meteorite in tow. The journey, which consumed a year or more show the sacred conical stone of Emesa – in all likelihood a meteorite – being transported in a chariot drawn by four horses. The stone usually is emblazoned with an eagle, which on the Rome piece is uncommonly bold.

When this medallion was struck in A.D. 230, Severus Alexander and his mother were facing a serious military threat in the East. The decaying Parthian Kingdom had finally given way to a vigorous leader named Ardashir, who founded what came to be known as the Sasanian Kingdom.

In 230 news arrived in Rome that Ardashir had invaded Roman territory, pillaging Mesopotamia, capturing Nisibis and Carrhae, and leading his army into Syria. In the following year the emperor and his mother led an army to the East to confront Ardashir. It was a difficult campaign from which the royal family did not return until the fall of 233.

But these were not the only problems faced by the emperor and his mother, for the political atmosphere in Rome had been unruly in recent years. The marriage of the emperor to the noblewoman Orbiana in 225 had given position to her father Sallustius, who stirred trouble among the praetorians. By 227 Mamaea had no choice but to dissolve the marriage she had arranged, banish Orbiana, and charge Sallustius with high treason for having taken revolutionary measures, for which he was promptly executed.

The praetorians came to resent the powerful roles that Mamaea and the senate had taken in government – so much so that in 229 the senator Dio Cassius (best known for his historical writing) left the capital because his safety could not be assured. Thus, we find context for the strong profile of Mamaea in the series of medallions to which this piece belongs.

The reverse types of the series are varied, usually showing military themes (expected on the eve of a campaign) and types dedicated to Jupiter and the eternity of Rome. Two others are of a totally different character: one inscribed TEMPORVM FELICITAS shows the emperor crowned by Victory and accompanied by Felicitas, and another – the type here – inscribed FELICITAS TEMPORVM shows the emperor seated on a curule chair, holding a globe and a scroll, being crowned by Victory, and accompanied by two female figures usually identified as Felicitas and Julia Mamaea. A variant of this type shows Felicitas holding a long caduceus rather than a scepter.

Though this medallion is not dateable by its inscriptions, it almost certainly was struck in 230 based upon its close relation to another dual-portrait medallion (Gneecchi III, p. 45, no. 20) dated by Toynbee to 230. That type shows the emperor seated, crowned by Victory and accompanied by Virtus or a soldier, who holds a shield inscribed VOT X. Severus Alexander took his decennal vows in the summer of 230, counting from when he was hailed Caesar on June 26, 221. The occasion was celebrated extensively with imperial coins showing Victory inscribing VOT X on a shield that often is fastened to a palm tree. Since this same decennal type occurs on sestertii and asses dated TRP VIII and COS III, the date of 230 is assured.

The year 248 marked what Romans believed was the thousandth anniversary of their capital city – a milestone by any standard. While the games went on in Rome the empire was sinking ever deeper into danger from its enemies on the borders, and these concerns were taking their toll in the provinces. One particularly vulnerable region was the Balkans, which existed under the ever-present threat of barbarian invasion across the Danube. Finally, in the spring or early summer of 248 the legions on the Danube supported their commander Pacatian in a rebellion against the reigning emperor Philip I 'the Arab, who sent his prefect Decius to put down the uprising. The revolt lasted a few months at the most, and sometime between the spring of 248 and early 249 Pacatian was murdered by his own men. Though it had ended, Pacatian's revolt indirectly caused the downfall of Philip, for the soldiers brought their complaints forth to Decius, who in the meantime had won his men's respect by cleaning the region of Goths, Germans and Dacian Carpi who had invaded Roman territory during the rebellion. In about June, 249 the same soldiers who had sponsored Pacatian hailed Decius their emperor, and encouraged him to march on Rome. Philip brought a large army against him, but was defeated in September or October, 249, thus ending his bashful and ineffective reign of five years.

The establishment of a dynasty has been a concern for countless rulers throughout history, and the emperors of Rome were no exception. Coinage from Imperial age forward is rich in dynastic references, including this provincial bronze of Nicomedia which portrays Valerian I, Gallienus and Valerian II, members of the short-lived dynasty envisioned by Valerian I soon after he was hailed emperor in A.D. 253.

Upon the acclamation of the ill-fated Valerian II as Caesar in 256, the citizens of Nicomedia seized upon the chance to portray three rulers, for it was an ideal opportunity to pair their images with a like number of civic emblems. These were important political displays in the contests that raged between the larger cities of Asia Minor, each of which went to great effort to accumulate the highest number of honours.

In this series there is considerable variety from one die to the next in the presentation of the portraits, though seniority is always shown correctly in their relative positions. All show the busts of the two emperors confronted – Valerian at the left and Gallienus at the right – with that of the Caesar between them. The bust of Valerian II is always smaller than those of the Augusti, and is placed on a lower plane – sometimes dramatically so, and other times only marginally so. On this coin the Augusti are laureate and the Caesar is bare headed, whereas on others examples all three wear radiate crowns, or the Augusti are radiate and the Caesar is bare-headed.

The reverses of these coins are brimming with civic pride. This piece shows a serpent rising next to an altar placed in the midst of three temples – a visual reflection of the accompanying inscription, which names the city and describes it as being thrice neocorate, or the keeper of three temples dedicated to the worship of Rome or its emperors. The other reverse type in this series shows three agonistic urns, the centre one containing two palm branches and those flanking it each containing one. The latter design suggests games were held when these coins were issued.

Though by this time Nicomedia had secured the title ‘first city of Bithynia,’ their provincial rival, Nicaea, still made an effort to impress the royal family by issuing a virtually identical coinage showing on the obverse the three imperial busts and on the reverse three agonistic urns with palm branches. In this case the reverse inscription describes their city as being the ‘best’ and the ‘most beautiful.’

The rebel coinage of Regalianus and his wife Dryantilla was struck briefly in 260/261, at a moment when the Empire was in complete chaos. The Persian king Shapur had captured Rome's senior emperor, Valerian I, in the summer of 260, and several rebellions soon broke out: Postumus in Gaul, Macrianus and Quietus at Antioch, and the governor Ingenuus at Sirmium. The latter was soon defeated, only to be succeeded by Regalianus, who was hailed by his soldiers at Carnuntum. Regalianus struck coins in his own name and in the name of a Sulpicia Dryantilla, a woman we must presume was his wife, though it has been suggested she was his mother. Virtually nothing is known of her except that she was the daughter of Claudia Ammiana Dryantilla and Sulpicius Pollio, an accomplished senator and officer under Caracalla. Their coins were extremely crude productions over-struck on earlier coins, principally Severan denarii, but ranging in date from Septimius Severus to Maximinus I 'Thrax'. The reverse die used for this coin was also used to strike double-denarii in the name of her husband (an example is illustrated RIC V, pt. II, pl. XX, 8; in the catalogue description Annona is misdescribed as Providentia). Both AVG and AVGG are used to end their reverse inscriptions, a feature that would seem to prove that the rebels' engravers merely copied types of circulating coins without regard for their relevance to the present regime. The undertype is sufficiently preserved to allow identification of the host coin as a denarius of Julia Domna

The Dioscuri, the heavenly twins Castor and Pollux who were credited with miraculously saving a Roman army at the battle of Lake Regillus in 484 B.C., appeared frequently on coins of the Roman Republic, but rarely on those of the empire. In that respect this aureus of Tacitus is intriguing, not only for its artful depiction of Castor, but for its use of that divinity so late in Imperial history. Even more remarkable, though, is the fact that Castor appears on a coin of an emperor who was no juvenile heir to the throne, but an elderly man who had enjoyed a long and distinguished career in the government and the military.

If literary references are any measure, interest in the Dioscuri was still reasonably strong in the early years of the Julio-Claudian dynasty, when male heirs often were likened to the Dioscuri. Subjects of that comparison include Gaius Caesar and his brother Lucius Caesar, Tiberius and his brother Nero Claudius Drusus, Tiberius' first two heirs Germanicus and Drusus (who, in fact, was nicknamed Castor), Germanicus' eldest sons Nero Caesar and Drusus Caesar, and the twin sons of Drusus and Livilla.

Thereafter, adoration of the Dioscuri faded, with references to them being rare. Except for the purposefully anachronistic 'restoration series' of Trajan, no image of Castor or the Dioscuri appears on coins for the more than two centuries between aurei issued in 41 B.C. for L. Servius Rufus and sestertii issued for Commodus in A.D. 177, during his first year as co-emperor with his father, Marcus Aurelius.

Next to portray Castor was Septimius Severus on aurei, denarii, quinarii, sestertii, dupondii and asses that he struck on behalf of his youngest son, Geta, in the period 200-202. For the sake of accuracy, we note rare issues for the Gallic rebels Postumus (aurei and double-denarii showing Castor standing beside a horse) and Victorinus (an aureus using the Dioscuri as the symbol for the tenth legion Gemina).

After this lone aureus of Tacitus, on which Castor is described as the emperor's conservator (protector), the only remaining issues of this kind were struck in the Tetrarchic period. An aureus of Constantius I Chlorus, struck as Caesar at Aquileia, shows the Dioscuri standing, and the rebel Maxentius produced a significant issue at Ostia from 309 to 312. That series, inscribed AETERNITAS AVG N, recalls the era of Rome's foundation by showing the Dioscuri standing beside their horses, sometimes accompanied by a miniature scene of Romulus and Remus being suckled by the she-wolf.

In 284 the Empire was in crisis: the 'dynasty' founded by Carus and his two sons in 282 had virtually collapsed, for not only had Carus died in 283 while campaigning against the Persians, but his youngest son, Numerian, who was leading the army back from the Persian front, died in the fall of 284. Remaining in power legitimately was the older brother, Carinus, who in the meantime had been ruling in the West. Following Numerian's murder, another commander, Diocles (the future emperor Diocletian), was hailed emperor in his place, and in opposition to Carinus in the West. Caught between these two rivals was a third commander, Julian of Pannonia, who then was governing the province of Venetia and determined to stake his claim. While keeping a wary eye on the approach of Diocletian, Carinus quickly dealt with the nearer usurper, Julian, whom he defeated early in 285. All of Julian's coins – billon aureliani and gold aurei (of which perhaps thirty are known) – were struck at Siscia, the only mint-city under his control.

The most familiar reverse type of later Roman medallions is devoted to the Tres Monetae. It perhaps first appeared on a brass medallion of Commodus, after which it becomes a staple throughout most of the 3rd Century. Initially it featured inscriptions such as AEQVITAS PVBLICA(E) or AEQVITAS AVGVSTI, but by the reign of Trajan Decius (A.D. 249-251) it had assumed its most familiar inscription MONETA AVGG.

Each of the three figures holds a cornucopia and set of scales, and stands beside a heap of coins. Invariably the two outer figures hold scales hung at the end of rods or cords of more or less equal length, whereas the central figure suspends her scale from a much longer rod or cord. Since the figures represent the three principal coining metals – gold, silver and copper – we may presume the central figure represents gold, and that her distinctive presentation indicates the more careful standard to which gold was weighed.

The aurei of Carausius include very rare pieces of unusual style that bear no mintmark and often have reverse inscriptions that run over into the exergue. Most specimens are tightly die linked, suggesting the issue was small and episodic.

They usually are attributed to a mint on the continent. Boulogne was an early suggestion, but it was based upon an incorrect recording of a find site. It is now almost universally believed that these aurei were struck in Rotomagus (Rouen) since base metal radiates of this issue are found in various parts of Northern France. One particularly important hoard of radiates in this style was unearthed at Rouen in 1846.

This aureus was first sold at auction by Sotheby's in November, 1881 as part of the collection formed by Reverend Dr. William Chadwick Neligan, the well-known Rector of St. Mary Shandon & St. Catherine in Cork. Since it became part of the Trau collection (sold in May, 1935), the aureus was missed by Percy Webb when he was composing RIC vol. V, pt. II, which went to press in 1933. The coin was then described in the 1944 Numismatic Chronicle and was the main subject of an article by Norman Shiel, "The Opes Legend on Coins of Carausius," in the 1973 Revue numismatique.

The reverse type, inscribed OPES I VI AVG, depicts a standing female divinity, who must be Abundantia for she holds a cornucopia and a cluster of grapes. Shiel considers I VI to be a simplification of the epithet invictus ('unconquered' or 'invincible'). This aureus is unique among the issues of Rotomagus in that its reverse inscription does not run over into the exergue and it is not die-linked with any other piece known to Shiel at the time of his work.

The style of the Rotomagus issues is simplistic, and the die execution crude. This suggests they were made by a team with little or no experience in die sinking and coin production, but which likely had adopted skills from related fields, such as blacksmithing and intaglio engraving. The inscriptions on these coins often are blundered and sometimes incomplete, indicating that the engravers were probably illiterate.

Though crude production standards are no guarantee that these aurei were an emergency military issue, the likelihood is strong. Perhaps the strongest prospect is that they were produced as a donative upon the establishment of Carausius' foothold on the continent in late 286 or early 287. Alternatively, they could have been an emergency issue in the spring of 289, when Maximian sent his failed expedition against Carausius, or an issue of early 293 anticipating the campaign of Constantius Chlorus, which was successful and cost the rebel his continental strongholds.

Since this class of Carausian aurei was struck at the 70-per-pound standard, a date in 286 or not long after might be preferred, for in 286 the weight of the imperial aurei of Diocletian and Maximian were increased to the 60-per-pound standard.

Martinian was the unfortunate soul who Licinius made his co-emperor in a moment of desperation following his defeat by Constantine at Adrianople on July 3, 324. Under virtually identical circumstances eight years before, Licinius had done the same disservice to Valerius Valens, who was executed after Licinius sued for peace. With this in mind, we can only imagine Martinian's desperation in accepting his hasty promotion from magister officorum (head of the civil service) to emperor. We are fortunate that coins were struck in Martinian's name, for their inscriptions provide him the title of Augustus – a contradiction to most of the literary sources, which only describe him as having held the subordinate rank of Caesar. The war quickly evolved on a disastrous path. Licinius was no better prepared the second time to meet Constantine, who this time was determined to make his victory complete. The armies were enormous: the combined land forces exceeded 250,000 men and the seas were crowded with some 500 ships. From the first engagement Licinius was on the retreat, falling back to the Bosphorus and instructing Martinian to raise reinforcements and to prevent Constantine from crossing into Asia Minor. But Crispus, the eldest son of Constantine, won a spectacular naval battle and took command of the Sea of Marmara, thus allowing a flotilla to deliver Constantinian troops onto Asian soil. Eventually Licinius took refuge in Nicomedia with a fraction of his original army. His surrender was arranged by Constantia, who was trapped in the middle as the wife of Licinius, the mother of Licinius II, and the half-sister of Constantine. Though the lives of Licinius and his son were initially spared, Martinian was executed not long after he had been sent in exile to Cappadocia.

This extraordinary medallion of Constans bears an unusual obverse inscription with the imperial epithets Pius and Felix (dutiful and happy) being presented in full, rather than abbreviated as P.F. The imperial title Pius was first employed by Antoninus Pius, who earned it for his efforts to assure the consecration of his predecessor, Hadrian.

Under Commodus the title Pius was first used in conjunction with Felix, a term representing happiness in the sense of the satisfaction gained from being prosperous or successful. After his reign the two titles became a popular formula and remained so in the West until the fall of Italy. However, in the East as early as the reign of Leo I (457-474), emperors began to mix the use of P.F. and some form of perpetuus, which described the coin issuer as emperor in perpetuity. Perpetuus usually was abbreviated P.P. or P.E., and by the early Byzantine era had replaced P.F. in coin inscriptions.

The reverse of this medallion, inscribed TRIVMFATOR GENTIVM BARBARARVM ('triumphator over the barbarian nations'), is a gloating declaration of Roman dominion over its foreign enemies. The claim was well deserved in the Constantinian era, as the 'barbarians' had been thoroughly dominated by Constantine I and the immediate record of his sons was laudable.

Though Constantius II, in the East, was burdened with a long and persistent war with the Sasanians that had been sparked by his father not long before this death in 337, success was more visible in the West. The issuer of this piece, the Western emperor Constans, had defeated the Sarmatians in 339, and in 342 had scored a significant victory over the Franks.

It would appear that this medallion celebrates that recent victory over the Franks, and it perhaps was distributed as a bonus to the soldiers. Simultaneously, it may have been associated with the beginning of Constans' tenth anniversary (decennalia), which began on December 25, 342 and was followed by a visit to Britain that required a risky winter crossing of the channel early in 343.

Interestingly, this coin type was an invention of Constans, who struck it only at mints under his control: Trier, Aquileia, Siscia and Thessalonica. It took the form of silver medallions and miliarenses that Constans issued in his name and on behalf of his brother Constantius II. Some later emperors adopted the type, with the most exceptional case being the rebel Magnentius, who struck silver medallions of the same weight after he had overthrown Constans and assumed control of Italy.

Most of these medallions weigh about 13 grams (slightly less than 12 scruples), meaning that about 25 were produced per Roman pound of silver. They were nearly the equivalent of three light miliarenses or four heavy siliquae and, depending on the prevailing gold-to-silver exchange ratio, would have been worth about 1/5th of a gold solidus.

Like her husband, the emperor Theodosius, Aelia Flaccilla was born to a good family in Spain, and when she married in about 376 it may never have occurred to her that Theodosius' career would draw her far from her homeland. After a year or less of marriage Flaccilla gave birth to her first son, Arcadius, and about six years later (long after she had moved to Constantinople and been hailed Augusta) to her second son, Honorius. Throughout her life – even as an empress – she bore a reputation for her piety and her generosity to the poor. Her coins were the first struck for an empress since the 330s and they reinstated the practice, which soon took an especially firm hold in the East. On her coins it is easy to see the iconographic connection to earlier issues of Fausta, Helena and Theodora, and to observe how they influenced future empress coinages. Additionally, her name Aelia, which is abbreviated AEL on her coin inscriptions, apparently was assumed to have been part of her title, for it was adopted as a title by later Augustae.

History records little of Eugenius, a professor of Latin and rhetoric who gave up teaching to occupy the throne of the Western Roman Empire for two years and a few days. The very fact that he was not qualified to be emperor made him the perfect candidate, for the Frankish general Arbogast wanted him as a puppet. It was a perfect follow-up to his murder of Valentinian II – the young Western emperor whom Theodosius had entrusted to Arbogast's regency. Afterwards the throne remained vacant for three months as Arbogast sought a replacement. Although only Theodosius I, the senior reigning emperor in the East, had the constitutional right to appoint the next emperor in the west, this did not deter Arbogast, who was firmly in control of the West. The elevation of Eugenius was of value to Arbogast on some level, for the old professor was not prone to religious fanaticism, and (as his bearded effigy attests) he was tolerant of pagans. When the army backing Eugenius seized Italy in 393, Theodosius responded with a campaign of his own, and routed them in September, 394. In the aftermath Eugenius was executed and the former Master of Infantry, Arbogast, was driven to flight and soon took his own life. During the six months between the defeat of Eugenius and Theodosius' natural death in January of 395, he remained in Milan and from there ruled over a united empire. Unity occurred on only two occasions after the empire had been divided by Valentinian I and Valens in 364, both of which were equally as brief and transient. With the death of Theodosius the temporary unity of east and west ceased, and the empires entered a period of great unrest under his two incompetent sons, Arcadius and Honorius, who promptly divided the empire between themselves.

- 804 Ingot 3rd-4th century AD, AV 327.95 g. A round, lentil shaped ingot inscribed ΕΥΔ on flat side. Apparently unrecorded. A very interesting and intriguing ingot. 25'000

Ex M&M sale 61, 1982, 238.

Though the weight of the Roman pound is nowhere recorded in ancient sources, it is generally agreed to have been approximately 327.5 grams. At almost precisely that amount, this crude, marked ingot represents one pound of gold. It very likely was cast in the 3rd or 4th Century A.D. (or later), and provides insight into how larger transactions may have occurred. If it belongs to the era of the solidus, it would have been the equivalent of 72 of those nomismae. For the sake of comparison, we should note that some one-pound silver ingots from the West of the mid-4th Century were made in a more regulated form, bearing impressions of round, coin-like stamps that would appear to be official.

It is difficult to determine if this ingot was official or of private manufacture, though its Greek inscription indicates it was used in the Eastern portion of the empire. Its principal inscription must be an abbreviation, and there are numerous Greek words beginning with the letter sequence epsilon upsilon delta that imply concepts such as being well-built or well-fashioned, being highly esteemed, being of good repute, good name or good credit, or righteous dealing – all of which would be appropriate to proclaim that a gold ingot was of correct weight and purity.

If used by the government, the gold in this ingot likely was comprised of bullion collected as taxes, which then was delivered to the scrinium aureae massae, the department at the imperial treasury that handled gold bullion (variously described as the 'Department of Gold Bars' or the 'Bureau of Gold by Mass'). This department accepted gold from a variety of sources, including tax revenues in bullion form that were created from coins that had just been melted down, only to then be allocated for re-coining.
