Conditions of Sale

The following terms and conditions are accepted by all persons participating in the auction:

1. Auction bidding is conducted in Swiss Francs. The highest bidder who has been acknowledged by the auctioneer when the hammer falls after the third call has legally bought the lot. Bidding usually begins at 80% of the estimate, provided no higher offers have been submitted. Written bids have priority. The successful bidder has committed himself personally to the purchases made. He cannot claim to have acted on behalf of a third party.
2. Absentee bidders can bid up to 24 hours before the start of the auction by writing, telephone or electronically. Telephone bidders must agree that calls may be recorded. The auction house does not accept liability for bidding mandates made by telephone or in writing.
3. Bidders must show proof of identification before the auction, and subsequently be registered. The Auction House may require a bank reference and/or guarantee. The Auction House reserves the right to deny a person from participating in the auction.
4. The auctioneer may raise or reject a bid without giving a reason, and furthermore reserves the right to combine or split up catalogue lots, or to offer them out of sequence or omit or withdraw them from the auction.
5. A commission of 18% will be levied on the hammer price - phone bidders and bidders using our Live Internet facilities pay an additional charge of 1.5%. The Swiss value added tax (VAT) of 8% is payable on the final price (hammer price, plus buyer's commission and any other amounts chargeable by the Auction House to the buyer). Gold coins (AV) are exempt from VAT.
If the purchases are exported, then the VAT will be refunded on production of a legally valid original export declaration stamped by Swiss Customs.
6. Payment is in Swiss Francs and is immediately due upon adjudication of the lot. Late payments will incur a monthly default interest of 1%.
7. Shipping and insurance are at the buyer's cost and risk. Any fees and charges payable abroad are borne by the buyer (successful bidder) who is responsible for acquiring the necessary information about any applicable customs and foreign exchange regulations. The Auction House accepts no liability for any contraventions of such regulations.
8. The Auction House offers an unconditional and unlimited guarantee for the authenticity of coins. All identifications and descriptions of the items sold in this catalogue are statements of opinion and were made in good faith.
9. The objects which come under the hammer are auctioned on behalf of a third party or are the property of the Auction House. The buyer (successful bidder) has no entitlement to have the identity of the consignor disclosed to them and acknowledges that the Auction House might receive a commission from the consignor for the sale.
10. The above conditions are a component of each individual contract of sale concluded at the auction. Alterations must be made in writing in order to be valid. If any parts of these Terms and Conditions should be no longer or not fully in conformity with the valid legal situation, this shall not affect the content and validity of the remaining parts. The above-mentioned conditions are written in German, French, Italian and English; the only valid text is the German one.
11. The contractual relationship between parties is subject in all facets to Swiss law. Place of performance is the registered office of the Auction House in 8001 Zurich, and the exclusive court of jurisdiction is Zurich.

Conditions de la vente aux enchères

Du fait de la participation à la vente aux enchères, les conditions suivantes sont réputées être acceptées :

1. Les enchères sont effectuées en Francs Suisses. L'adjudication est réalisée après trois appels consécutifs du plus offrant dont l'offre a été acceptée par le commissaire priseur et qui constitue une obligation. La mise à prix est effectuée en règle générale à 80 %, dans la mesure où il n'y a pas d'offres disponibles et plus élevées. Les offres formulées par écrit sont prioritaires. Chaque enchérisseur s'engage personnellement en ce qui concerne les acquisitions réalisées par ses soins. Il ne peut pas faire valoir le fait d'avoir agi pour le compte d'une tierce personne.
2. Les demandes d'enchères par téléphone ou par écrit (également par moyen électronique) pour les personnes intéressées et non présentes sont réceptionnées jusqu'à 24 heures avant le début de la vente aux enchères. Les enchérisseurs par téléphone acceptent que la communication téléphonique puisse être enregistrée. La salle des ventes n'assume aucune responsabilité quant aux enchères effectuées par téléphone ou par écrit.
3. Les enchérisseurs sont priés de se légitimer avant la vente aux enchères et de se faire enregistrer à l'issue de la vente. La salle des ventes peut exiger une référence bancaire et/ou une garantie. La salle des ventes a le droit de ne pas laisser une personne participer à la vente aux enchères.
4. L'enchérisseur peut, à sa guise, surenchérir une offre ou bien la décliner sans indication de motifs. L'enchérisseur se réserve en outre le droit d'associer des lots, de les séparer, de faire des offres en dehors de l'ordre prévu ou de les laisser de côté, voire de se retirer de la vente aux enchères.
5. Une commission de 18% est perçue sur le prix d'adjudication. Les acquéreurs qui souhaitent participer aux enchères par téléphone ou en ligne avec nos facilités Live Internet paieront un frais supplémentaire de 1,5%. La taxe à la valeur ajoutée suisse d'un montant de 8,0 % sera perçue sur le prix définitif (prix d'adjudication plus supplément et sur tous les autres montants facturés à l'acquéreur par la salle des ventes). Les pièces de monnaie en or (AV) sont dispensées de la TVA.
En cas d'exportation de l'objet adjugé vers l'étranger, l'acquéreur se voit restituer la TVA lorsqu'il est en mesure de présenter une déclaration d'exportation réglementaire, en bonne et due forme, revêtu du cachet original des autorités douanières suisses.
6. Le prix total est exigible après application du supplément et doit être acquitté en devises suisses lors de la remise de l'objet adjugé. Pour les paiements effectués ultérieurement, une pénalité de retard de 1 % par mois sera facturée.
7. Les frais d'envoi et d'assurance sont à charge et au risque de l'acheteur. Les taxes ou les impôts facturés à l'étranger sont à la charge de l'acquéreur (enchérisseur). Il lui incombe de s'informer au sujet des directives étrangères en matière de douane et de devises. La salle des ventes décline toute responsabilité pour les éventuelles infractions à l'encontre de ces directives.
8. La salle des ventes garantit l'authenticité des monnaies sans réserve et sans limitation dans le temps. Toutes les indications mentionnées dans le catalogue sont rassemblées en toute conscience et en toute bonne foi.
9. Les objets mis aux enchères le sont pour le compte de tierces personnes ou bien sont la propriété de la salle des ventes. L'acquéreur (enchérisseur) n'a aucun droit d'obtenir communication du nom de la personne qui met en vente et se déclare en accord avec le fait que la salle des ventes perçoive une provision de cette dernière.
10. Les présentes conditions font partie intégrante de tout contrat de vente conclu dans le cadre de la vente aux enchères. Les modifications ne sont valables que par écrit. Le fait que des parties des présentes conditions de vente aux enchères venaient à ne plus correspondre, ou du moins plus intégralement, à la situation juridique en vigueur, n'affecte en rien les autres parties, ni dans leur contenu, ni dans leur validité. La version en langue allemande constitue la référence des présentes conditions de vente aux enchères.
11. La relation contractuelle entre les parties en cause est soumise, dans toutes ses composantes, au droit Suisse. La compétence juridique est fixée au siège de la salle des ventes à 8001 Zurich, et le for juridique exclusif est Zurich.

Foreword

Numismatica Ars Classica is truly honoured to present the second part of this amazing collection of Roman Republican coins, undoubtedly one of the most important collections of this field of ancient numismatics ever to be offered at public auction.

The gold component alone is staggering. Boasting no less than 62 gold coins, not only is it the most complete and important series of Republican gold coins currently in private hands, but it also superior to the famous collections of Ponton d'Amécourt, Ryan, Prowe, Consul Weber and RBW. The only collection that surpasses it in terms of the number of Republican gold coins offered is the mythical Montagu collection.

The silver component of the collection is equally astonishing, especially considering the exceptional quality of the coins. If we then think that the collection was initiated almost fifty years ago when the quest for quality was not as obsessive as it is today, we must regard the collector as a precursor of modern times.

Unfortunately the collector, who formed this collection over the course of almost 50 years, has decided to remain anonymous, preferring to let the coins speak for themselves. However, the title of the collection suggests the importance of the role played by the numismatist who helped him assemble it.

For those who do not know him, George Muller was Director of Spink & Son in London for over 30 years. He first came to London to study and attain a good knowledge of the English language, which was essential at the time. Desiring to work for a while in a London firm, preferably in banking, he looked for a position in the commercial field. However, through contacts, he was directed to Spink & Son Ltd, where his father knew a manager.

This firm was well-known as a fine arts dealers and in September 1948, Muller was hired on the merit of his knowledge of French and German, and his great interest in ancient history, Athens and Rome. This fitted him well to assist the old manager (80 years at the time) for Ancient Coins, the famous Leonard Forrer Snr, the co-author with Charles Hersh of a work on "The Roman Republican Coinage", published in 1953, which was a review of the original work of Rev E.A. Sydenham. Though entirely new to him, Muller found this field most exciting, his interest for it growing year by year. Having been told by the Directors of the firm that "he would need 10 years to get to know enough to be useful", he became within 2 years the right hand of Leonard Forrer Snr and, within 5 years (when LF Snr died), he had taken over the Ancient section of the Coin Department. This he developed successfully becoming Assistant Director. His choice fields were Greek coins and the Roman Republican series. When Spink & Son was taken over and things progressively changed within the Company, he decided to leave in late 1982. He continued for a number of years to be actively engaged in the field of Ancient Coins, despite his move to Switzerland with his family, and continued his activity on an international basis.

Muller guided the collector with impeccable taste and competence, choosing every single coin together with him and being just as scrupulous as he would have been when choosing for his own collection. This is a fine example of how a dealer should conduct his business: a dealer must consider their client's collection as if it were their own and they must never collect coins that could cause a potential conflict of interest with their clientele. Muller belongs to that great generation of numismatists such as Marco and Mario Ratto, Ernesto Santamaria, Leo Mildenberg, Herbert Cahn, Pierre Strauss and Jean Vinchon (to name but a few), who had the capacity to fascinate and captivate their clients, not only with their great numismatic knowledge, but also and above all with their charm, charisma and savoir-faire.

As we mentioned in the previous catalogue, given its importance, we have decided to divide the collection into three parts. Rather than separating the coins chronologically which would have resulted in three somewhat unbalanced auctions, our desire was to form three groups of equal importance. The third and last part of the collection will be offered in May 2014. Nevertheless, we intend to publish the collection in its entirety and ordered chronologically in 2014.

In this sale we offer a further 277 coins. The quality of the coins is extraordinary but for the sake of brevity we will limit ourselves to mentioning just a small selection of the many coins that deserve individual attention: firstly we have again a superb series of denarii of the Social War (lots 90-95) which is absolutely magnificent, this is shortly followed by an exceptional aureus of Sulla (lot 110). Moving through the sale, we cannot fail to mention the extremely rare denarius Q. Pomponius Muta with the muse Erato (lot 144) which ranks among the best specimens known of this rare and difficult issue, and a splendid and very rare denarius of Caesar (lot 208). Returning to gold, we must certainly include an extraordinary aureus of Mark Antony from the Quadrumviral period (lot 224), one of the best, if not the best, of this series to have appeared in a public sale.

Next, we would like to draw attention to one of the most sought after pieces for a collector of Roman coins, the extremely rare aureus of Brutus with Casca Longus (236), followed by one of the greatest rarities of the whole Republican series, one of the three denarii of Quintus Cornuficius (lot 237).

We would not finish without mentioning an extremely rare aureus of Marc Antony and his brother Lucius Antony (lot 250), a magnificent denarius of Labienus (lot 258), one of the finest specimens known bearing a portrait of superb style and beauty, and two also exceedingly rare aurei of Octavian (lots 259 and 260). Last, but not least we must refer to two also extremely rare aurei of Octavian (lots 259 and 260).

To conclude, we hope that this collection will be remembered in the history of numismatics alongside Haeberlin, Nicolas and RBW as it deserves to be and that the coins will go on to give to their future owners just as much joy as they have given our collector.

US IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON COINS OF ITALIAN AND GREEK TYPE

None of the coins offered in this sale are subject to any kind of US import restrictions, since we are in possession of the necessary documentation for importation into the United States.

Nevertheless, Numismatica Ars Classica NAC AG endeavours to provide its American clients with the best service possible and we will therefore take it upon ourselves whenever possible to carry out all of the customs formalities for importation into the USA and will then ship the lots to each individual client from within the United States.

In the Roman Republic gold coinage was struck only on rare occasions. It was introduced during the Second Punic War, when Rome and her Italian allies struggled to defeat the Carthaginian invader Hannibal, and it was not struck again for nearly 125 years. This next occasion was a crisis that equally tested the Romans, for they suffered an uprising of their Italian allies in 91 B.C., and for the first time Roman armies invaded the capital. The circumstances behind these terrible events had long been forming. For centuries Rome had relentlessly subdued its neighbours, and in the process it had constructed a system of alliances which allowed her to collect taxes and levy troops every year. It was a double-edged sword for the allies – while it was better to join Rome than to oppose her, Rome could only remain powerful because it used their young men for its conquests. There were several levels of alliance membership, and neighbouring cities within the same regions often had a very different status. The ultimate prize for Rome's Italian federates was obtaining Roman citizenship, and in 91 B.C. that cause was taken up by the tribune Livius Drusus. But his swift and brutal murder dashed all hope and a rebellion erupted throughout Italy. Leading the way were the Samnites, a fierce people living in the hills and mountains near Rome. After suffering initial defeats, Rome was able in 90 and 89 to satisfy most of its former allies with promises of Roman citizenship (which, remarkably, remained unfulfilled until the census of 70). Though Rome pacified most of its opponents, the Samnites continued to resist, and in 88 even appealed to king Mithradates VI of Pontus for help. Mithradates sent financial aid and, in the meantime, he caused the murder of 80,000 Romans and Italians living in Asia before ravaging Roman territories in Asia Minor and Greece. These two crises – the resistance of the Samnites and the aggressions of Mithradates – set the stage for a conflict between the Roman warlords Sulla and Marius. Through many tribulations, Sulla overcame all of his opponents, in part by unleashing Rome's own armies against the capital, something which had never before occurred. Sulla was able to impose what later Roman historians called the Regnum Sullanum, a dictatorial era during which he executed his enemies with appalling cruelty. However, he eventually restored the senate's power, and in 79 retired to Campania shortly before he died. This rare aureus celebrates the triumphs Sulla was awarded for his defeat of Mithradates, and of the Samnites at the Battle of the Colline Gate in 82. On the reverse a triumphal quadriga bears the figure of Sulla, who is crowned by a Victory flying above. The inscription L SVLLA IM makes it clear that Sulla is the figure in the quadriga. This aspect should not be overlooked, for it is an early example of a Roman coin depicting a living person – something that would eventually become a defining feature of coins of the Imperial period. In this aureus we have a precursor to the royal portraiture initiated by Julius Caesar nearly four decades later. Also, since this coin was issued either contemporarily or soon after Sulla's triumphal procession through the streets of Rome, it serves as a document of that great event.

Ex Rollin & Feuadent 25-30 April 1887, Ponton d'Amécourt, 38; Hirsch 18, 1907, Imhoof-Blumer, 491 and Leu 22, 1979, 185 sales.

The portrait aurei of 42 B.C. are devoted to the three members of the second triumvirate – Octavian, Antony and Lepidus. All were produced by four moneyers, Clodius, Mussidius, Varus and Regulus, and Buttrey's proposal that the four moneyers struck in the same year has generally been accepted. Each moneyer struck portrait aurei for each triumvir, making it a comprehensive series. The aurei of L. Livineius Regulus are unique within the group because they are not die linked with coins of the other three moneyers. This aspect, taken with the unusual characteristics of some of Regulus' silver coins, allowed Buttrey to argue that Regulus was the primus, or leading member, of the college of four moneyers. If so, the coins of Regulus may have been struck first, with those of Clodius, Mussidius and Varus following in a manner that allowed them to be die linked among each other. Based upon the inscription PRAEF.VR on one of Regulus' denarii, Buttrey suggests Regulus was serving as the praefect of the city of Rome in 42 B.C., and that his duties included control of the coinage when consuls were absent. Thus, Regulus out of necessity may have become one of the moneyers so he could perform his expanded duties as praefect. Regulus' portrait aurei were carefully conceived, as the reverse type associated with each triumvir refers to the divine forbearers of the men: Octavian claimed descent from Venus, which is implied by Regulus' type of Aeneas carrying Anchises; Lepidus counted Mars among his ancestors, which is alluded to by his type depicting the Vestal Virgin Aemilia; and Antony is said to have been descended from Hercules, who is shown on the aurei Regulus produced for him. As Buttrey points out, offering descent from a divinity as a qualification for authority was not original to this series; similar overtures had been made on earlier coinage by Sulla (with Venus), Pompey (with Neptune) and Julius Caesar (with Venus). However, Regulus' coins show a strengthening of that trend, and imply that "...the Fortune of the city was to be assured by divinity as it were made flesh." The portrait die of this specimen was paired only with one reverse die, assuring us that it did not have a particularly long life. Stylistically it is perhaps the finest of all the Antony portrait dies employed by these moneyers. The inscription IIII VIR A P F is instructive, if not entirely clear. It almost certainly abbreviates quattuoviri argento publico feriundo or quattuoviri auro publico feriundo, with the latter representing the first time gold was included as part of the regular issues – something of a landmark in the development of Roman coinage.

The year 42 B.C. was extraordinarily rich in coinage. The obvious explanation is that the Caesareans were confiscating vast amounts of property in their proscriptions, which they in turn were using to prepare for the upcoming war against Brutus and Cassius. Crawford attributes more than ninety different coinages to 42 B.C., struck by four moneyers and eight commanders operating in Africa, the East, Greece, Italy and Sicily.

This aureus was struck by Lucius Mussidius Longus, one of the four moneyers of 42 B.C. Its reverse depicts Mars, nude except for his Corinthian helmet, holding a spear and sword, and placing his foot on a fallen shield, which must refer to the preparations being made by the triumvirs' desire to wage war on Brutus and Cassius. This reverse is known from only three dies, which Mussidius used interchangeably with portrait dies of Octavian, Antony and Lepidus.

Coins with the portrait of Brutus are among the most desired of all objects from the Roman world. Here we have a remarkable aureus with a realistic portrait of the conflicted nobleman who forged the plot to murder Julius Caesar, and whose legacy is still subject open to a wide range of interpretations.

The fact that Brutus placed his own portrait on coinage is clear testimony to his confusion about his principles and his mission, for it contradicts some of the lofty Republican sentiments that he proclaimed as a defence for his murder of Caesar. When Brutus came to lead his own political movement he, too, behaved as a despot, and like Caesar before him, he succumbed to the temptation to place his image on circulating coins.

Cassius, his principal ally, did not follow suit. This is a double-edged sword: though we may admire the nobility of Cassius' restraint, it is a great loss that no coin portraits of him exist. This deprives us not only of an assured image from coinage, but it means we are unable to assign to him any un-inscribed portraits in other media, such as marble or gemstone.

As with all coins that Brutus produced as Emperor, this aureus was probably struck in the late summer or in the fall of 42 B.C., not long before he and Cassius were defeated at Philippi by Mark Antony and Octavian. Since these Republican warlords were operating in the eastern Mediterranean, a host of mints in Asia Minor and Greece emerge as possibilities, though we may best describe them as products of "moving mints" that accompanied the emperors and their vast armies.

Brutus struck two issues of aurei with his portrait. We are fortunate that this issue of Servilius Casca offers a sober and realistic image, especially in comparison with his other aurei, struck by the legate Pedanius Costa, which bear what Sheldon Nodelman rightly describes as a portrait of "neoclassic" style.

The features of Brutus on this piece are fully developed, and there is no attempt to portray youthfully this noble Roman, who was probably forty-three at the time. In that respect, these aurei may offer the most truthful depiction of Brutus, perhaps eclipsing the very best portraits on the Eid Mar coinage.

By the time he was appointed governor of Africa Vetula (the 'old' province) in 44 B.C., Quintus Cornuficius already had enjoyed a distinguished career in government and as a poet and orator. He counted among his friends Catullus and Cicero, and had been a loyal ally of Julius Caesar in his struggle against the Pompeians. After the murder of Caesar, Cornuficius voiced his opposition to the Triumvirs: he sided with the senate in the War of Mutina (43 B.C.), refused to allow Antony's nominee to replace him as governor, and thus was named in the Triumviral proscriptions. From his base in Africa, he aided Sextus Pompey and allowed many of those who also had been proscribed to take refuge in his territory. Cornuficius' vocal opposition to the Triumvirs, however, proved to be his undoing, for in 42 B.C. he was attacked by Titus Sextius, governor of neighbouring Africa Nova (the 'new' province). The fact that Cornuficius was hailed Imperator and was able to produce an intriguing coinage with his title suggests his defence was initially successful before, late in the year, he was defeated and killed near Utica. His coin designs are highly personal, and the few dies used to produce them were engraved in unusually fine style. He chose for the obverse of his coins the portraits of Ceres-Tanit, Africa and Jupiter Ammon, all of which celebrated his province. These were paired with a single reverse type that showed Cornuficius being crowned by Juno Sospita. The fact that he is veiled, holds a lituus and includes AVGVR in the inscription underscores the pride he held in the augurate to which he had been appointed by Julius Caesar in 47 B.C. Since he is crowned by Juno Sospita, we should assume that is a reference to his Lanuvine origin.

The career of Lucius Staius Murcus, like that of so many commanders of the Imperial age, is not well documented. He seems to have been one of the more gifted military minds of his age, and it is clear from coinage that he was hailed Imperator, though the occasion is not recorded. Equally elusive are the circumstances under which he struck his coins, all of which provide ample ground for speculation. According to Appian, Murcus did not participate in the murder of Julius Caesar, whom he had served as a legate, yet he was at that meeting where Caesar was killed and was among the first to raise their swords in defence of the assassins. Soon afterward, Murcus went to Syria as the designated proconsul of 44 B.C.

He brought with him three legions to restore order in the wake of a rebellion that had broken among the Syrian army under the leadership of the ex-Pompeian Q. Caecilius Bassus. Accounts vary, but it would appear that Murcus and the governor of Bithynia, Q. Marcius Crispus, joined forces to besiege Bassus in the stronghold of Apameia. The stalemate was resolved only when Cassius – who, with Brutus, was now preparing for war against the Caesarians – negotiated to acquire all of the legions for his Republican cause: three each from Murcus and Crispus, and one or two from Bassus. In return for his legions and his change of loyalty, Murcus received a command position in Cassius' fleet. Murcus may have taken part in the infamous siege of Rhodes in the spring of 42, and soon afterward was entrusted with an important mission. He sailed with a large force to the southern tip of the Peloponnesus, where he was to intercept a fleet that Queen Cleopatra VII was leading westward to aid Antony and Octavian. But the two forces never met, as most of Cleopatra's fleet was destroyed in a gale, and Murcus could do little more than survey the wreckage. His original mission now scrapped, Murcus engaged in some looting in the Peloponnesus before sailing further westward to the Italian port of Brundisium, where he began to blockade Antony's effort to transport troops and supplies to Macedon. He performed well against the under-supplied Antony until Octavian arrived with ships from Sicily. Thereafter, a great many vessels slipped through and Murcus' efforts were of little value until Cassius reinforced him with a fleet of warships and auxiliary vessels under the command of Ahenobarbus. The enlarged blockade proved effective, and remained in force until the Battle of Philippi. Indeed, on the very day of the battle, Murcus and Ahenobarbus had their greatest success by intercepting a transport of soldiers and supplies under the command of Calvinus. The loss of those Caesarean reinforcements – on the day their comrades had triumphed at Philippi – was disheartening; many vessels and seasoned soldiers were lost in the Adriatic. After learning that Brutus and Cassius were dead, and their armies defeated, Murcus and some Republican refugees gathered and eventually sailed westward to Sicily to join the ranks of Sextus Pompey. In doing so, he greatly enlarged the number of ships and soldiers at the rebel's disposal, and added a substantial sum of money to his coffers. It was perhaps in this period of uncertainty between Philippi and his joining Pompey, when Murcus was commander of a fleet without a cause, that he struck his denarii. If we subscribe to Appian's view, the loyalty and support of Murcus was rewarded only by Pompey's growing suspicion and envy. It is equally likely that Murcus demanded to play a more prominent role in affairs, and that Pompey feared the consequences of sharing that much authority. In either case, it appears that Pompey began to suspect his comrade's motives, and isolated him from command decisions so plainly that by 39 an irreparable rift had developed. When Murcus took a leave of absence to Syracuse that same year he was murdered by men in the service of Pompey.

This aureus depicting the bare heads of Marc Antony and his youngest brother Lucius Antony is one of the rarest of the dual-portrait coinages of the Imperial period. The family resemblance is uncanny, and one wonders if they truly looked this much alike, or if it is another case of portrait fusion, much like we observe with the dual-portrait billon tetradrachms of Antioch on which the face of the Egyptian queen Cleopatra VII takes on the square dimensions of Marc Antony. When Antony fled Rome to separate himself from Octavian and to take up his governorship in Gaul, Lucius went with him, and suffered equally from the siege of Mutina. This coin, however, was struck in a later period, when Lucius had for a second time taken up arms against Octavian in the west. Marc Antony was already in the east, and that is the region from which this coinage emanates. Since Lucius lost the 'Perusine War' he waged against Octavian, and subsequently was appointed to an office in Spain, where he died, it is likely that he never even saw one of his portrait coins.

Crawford has "misgivings", yet in a coinage riddled with cacography, a simple scribal error as here is almost predictable. The die-engraver, instead of mindlessly copying his model, paused to think about what he was doing and started to make AVGVR which he was obliged, when he returned to his senses, to continue as AVGVR, omitting III for lack of space. The early imperial bronze coinage abounds in such errors.

The imperial age offered much opportunity to ambitious commanders, as anyone who could lead men in battle was a valued commodity. Loyalty was not always the most valued trait in this environment, for on many occasions defections were not only sensible, but invited, and rewarded. We tend to degrade traitors in the historical tradition, but we often are not privy to the multitude of factors faced by these men, which ranged from subtle personality conflicts to unexpected political developments. It is in this charitable light, perhaps, that we should judge Labienus, one of the vigorous commanders from the age of Antony, Octavian and Sextus Pompey. Originally Brutus and Cassius had sent Labienus to Parthia to seek support from king Orodes II, but he could not achieve his objective before his masters were defeated at Philippi in October, 42 B.C. Labienus was thus in a bind, being unable to return to the West. Rather than facing his punishment, Labienus switched strategies by encouraging Orodes II to invade Syria, with himself sharing the command with the king's son, Pacorus I. The invasion probably began early in 40 B.C. when Antony was torn between that calamity and an equally urgent situation in the West, where his brother Lucius had been defeated by Octavian in the Perusine War. Antony decided to sail westward to meet Octavian and, in the meantime, many cities and legions defected to Labienus, who presented himself as the last ember of the Republican cause. He and Pacorus initially defeated Antony's governor Lucius Decidius Saxa, and then they divided their forces: Labienus invaded Asia Minor and Pacorus drove into Palestine and Phoenicia. Alarmed by their success, early in 39 B.C. Antony sent his lieutenant Ventidius to restore order, which he did with great efficiency. He first captured and executed Labienus at the Cilician Gates in 39 B.C. and soon afterward chased Pacorus and his army back across the Euphrates. This famous denarius bears a portrait of the unfortunate Labienus, identified by his name, the title imperator, and the cognomen Parthicus, which he adopted as an expression of his success in gaining Parthian help in what he branded as the defense of the Republic. The reverse bears no inscription, but shows a bridled horse fitted with a saddle and bow-case; there can be little doubt that this represents the cavalry contingent of the invasion force, which was 20,000 strong. In essence it honours the famous Parthian cavalry, and in that regard we may see this as a coin of two cultures, with the obverse devoted to the Romans, the reverse to the Parthians.

Ex Naville 10, 1925, 1750; Glendining's February 1951, Ryan part IV, 1632 and Leu 38, 1986, 219 sales. From the Biaggi collection.

In 40 B.C. the Roman numismatic landscape was diverse and complex. Two moneyers issued coins at Rome, including this aureus with the portrait of Octavian. Additionally, Octavian issued his own coins at mints outside of the capital, as did four others: Sextus Pompey in Sicily, Marc Antony and Quintus Labienus in the East, and Domitius Ahenobarbus in the region of the Adriatic or Ionian Sea.

After the Battle of Philippi in October, 42 B.C., Octavian began the thankless task of settling some 40,000 veterans on their promised lands. As he acquired land in Italy by force, his popularity suffered, and Marc Antony's wife Fulvia and brother Lucius Antonius preyed upon his misfortune. Their political attacks stirred the veterans of Antony against those of Octavian, culminating in the Perusine War (41-40 B.C.). Octavian triumphed in this conflict and afterward, upon the death of Antony's governor, seized Gaul for himself.

Alarmed by these events, Antony sailed to the west to settle matters with Octavian. Though their meeting was preceded with hostilities and a siege of Brundisium by Antony, the triumvirs were able to settle their differences. The resulting pact of October 40 B.C. confirmed Antony's rule in the East and Octavian's control of the West, and theoretically bound the men through the marriage of Antony to Octavian's sister, Octavia.

In the midst of these events, this aureus was struck by the moneyer Ti. Sempronius Gracchus. His issues bear on their obverse the portrait of Octavian or of the deified Julius Caesar, making it clear where his allegiance lay. Though Gracchus' coin inscriptions indicate he was quaestor designate, nothing else is known of his life. The portrayal of Fortuna alludes to the conclusion of Octavian's civil wars with Brutus and Cassius and with Antony's relatives. The moneyer's other reverse type, which shows a legionary eagle, a military standard, a plow and a surveyor's rod, is a clear allusion to Octavian's resettlement of veterans.

In 40 B.C., when this coin is thought to have been struck, the conflict between Octavian and Marc Antony not only reached a new peak, but found an uneasy resolution. In the previous months Marc Antony's wife Fulvia and brother Lucius had harassed Octavian while Antony was away in the East. Whether a serious escalation was intended cannot be assessed, but political and verbal assaults grew until Lucius gained permission to wage war on Octavian, whose allies Agrippa and Salvidienus hastily gathered troops from Spain. Thus began the Perusine War (41-40 B.C.), a brief affair in which Lucius Antony's army was besieged in Perusia (Perugia) and surrendered in February of 40 B.C. The defeated Lucius was soon assigned to a promagistracy in Spain, where he seems to have died not long thereafter. Fulvia also died in the aftermath of the war. Antony was alarmed by the state of affairs and returned to the West, where he met Octavian at Brundisium in October of that year, and the Triumvirs ironed out their disagreements. This rare aureus was struck by the moneyer Q. Voconius Vitulus, a man who is unattested outside of his coinage. His coin types betray to his allegiance to Octavian, who must have considered him an up-and-coming ally. Inscriptions on his coins tout his status as quaestor designate, but nothing further of his career or fate is known. The obverses of Vitulus' coins bear portraits of Julius Caesar and Octavian, and stress the relationship between the slain dictator and his nephew. Some examples show a lituus with the portraits of both men to show that both had held the augurship, and most of the Octavian portraits are accompanied by an inscription that names him as the son of the deified Julius. The reverse type of a standing calf is strictly personal, being a punning allusion to the cognomen Vitulus, which literally means calf.

The relationship between Marc Antony and Octavian was adversarial even in the best of time. They clashed twice in less than two years after Caesar's murder, after which they formed a Triumvirate with Lepidus, preferring it to a winner-take-all contest. Both lived uncomfortably in their new skins, biding time in the hope they might gain the upper hand with the passage of time. However, the battle they avoided later in 43 B.C was only postponed until they faced off at Actium a dozen years later.

Their cooperation in the short term allowed Antony and Octavian to jointly defeat Brutus and Cassius at Philippi later in 42, after which victors went their separate ways: Antony departing for the east, and Octavian returning to the east. Upon arriving in Italy, Octavian was faced with the two unexpected foes, Antony's wife Fulvia and his youngest brother Lucius Antony, who took up arms against him Octavian. The young triumvir scored a military victory against them in the Perusine War, and both of his opponents died of natural causes within months of war's end.

Civil with Antony was now imminent, but was averted when the two met in southern Italy in October 40, and signed the pact at Brundisium, by which they divided the Roman world between themselves. Not surprisingly, Antony took the east and Octavian took the west, and together they confirmed that Lepidus, the "third wheel" of triumvirate, should remain restricted to North Africa. In an effort to strengthen the new agreement, Antony entered into an ill-fated marriage with Octavian's only sister, Octavia.

This rare and impressive aureus was struck at the Italian mint by Octavian soon after the pact was signed. The portraits are of exceptional quality, especially when compared with the more common dual-portrait struck by Antony in the East. The youth Octavian is shown bearded in the style that, rather ironically, is reminiscent of Brutus "Eid Mar" portraits.

Two main portrait types for Julius Caesar appear to have been introduced around the time of his murder in 44 B.C. The standard portrait, the 'Chiaramonti type', was the model used for most Caesar issues of the Imperial age, whereas the 'Tusculum type' was used only for the first Caesar portrait coins, denarii of M. Mettius, and for aurei of the Trajanic restoration series.

The 'Tusculum type,' as described by Johansen in his study of the portraiture of Julius Caesar (Ancient Portraits in the J. Paul Getty Museum: Volume 1, pp. 17-40), is named after a marble portrait in the Museo di Antichità in Turin that was excavated from the Forum in 1825 by Lucien Bonaparte. It is recognisable by the diagnostic 'saddle' on the top of Caesar's head created by the prolonged back of his cranium.

Trajan issued two aurei in his restoration series for Caesar. One, represented here, shows on its obverse Caesar wearing a wreath and surrounded by the inscription DIVVS IVLIVS; its reverse depicts Pax-Nemesis in the manner of the aurei and denarii of Claudius inscribed PACI AVGVSTAE. The other, which bears on its obverse the inscription C IVLIVS CAES IMP COS III and shows Caesar bare-headed, is paired with a reverse type that is a partial invention likely derived from Augustan aurei and denarii. In both cases, however, the inspiration may have been coinage of the Flavians, who recycled those earlier designs.
